(2) 7 B. L. R. 136; 13 M. I. A. 560; 15 W. R. (P. C.) 35; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 410; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 623; 20 E. R. 660.

(3) 1 M. I. 241; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 198; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 531; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1 (P. C.)

SAIYIDUDDIN v. AVADH BEHARI SINGH.

Before me it is contended by Mr. Ba Dun that as the Transfer of Property Act applies to the district where the land in dispute is situate, the above ruling does not apply. But the fact is that in regard to mortgages of immovable property only section 59, which relates to the subject of how such mortgages should be made, has been extended. Even section 58 which defines a mortgage of immovable property and specifies and defines certain well known mortgages has not been extended. What matters really in this case is section 60. If it has been extended the clause must be held to be invalid, for that section means that where there is a mortgage there is an equity of redemption which the mortgagor cannot contract himself out of; it is not prefaced with the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary", thus indicating that the mortgagor will have the right to redeem even in spite of express terms contained in the mortgage to the contrary. The section has not been extended to Lower Burma outside of certain towns. The general law propounded in the above Privy Council cases must, therefore, prevail.

The appeal is allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1086 OF 1916.
June 7, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Atkinson and
Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

Babu SAIYIDUDDIN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Babu AVADH BEHARI SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Malikana, suit for recovery of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 131, scope of.

Where the plaintiffs' claim for malikana is established by suit, its denial by the opposite party in a subsequent suit is barred by res judicata. [p. 865, col. 2.]

Article 131 of the Limitation Act means no more than this that if a party entitled to claim malikana is refused the enjoyment of his right after demand, he must establish his right by suit brought within twelve years from the date of such refusal. The Article does not apply where the plaintiff has already in a former suit obtained a decree declaratory of his title. [p. 865, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Monghyr.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmed Rajendra Prasad and Syed Muhammad Tahir, for the Appellants.

Mr. Surendra Mohan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs seek in this action to recover a sum of Rs. 75-8-0 by way of principal and interest from the defendants as a personal debt. The money claimed is represented to be malikana money payable out of the defendants' property to the plaintiffs and the years in respect of which the said malikana is claimed are 1315 to 1318 inclusive. Both the lower Courts have decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

In second appeal it is argued before us that the plaintiffs' right to recover the malikana money is barred on two grounds, viz., that in the first place no right to claim malikana from the defendants ever in fact existed; and that in the second place even if it did exist, it has never been recognized.

The learned Government Advocate, who appears on behalf of the defendants, has addressed a very lengthy and elaborate argument to us; but after carefully considering it we are satisfied that his argument is unfounded. He contends that Article 131 of the Limitation Act applies and that the period within which an action for a periodically recurring right must be brought is twelve years from the date when the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right.

It appears that in the year 1877 the plaintiffs sued to establish their right to recover from the defendants the malikana they claim. The written statement filed in that suit on behalf of the predecessors of the present defendants denied the plaintiff's right to this malikana; but notwithstanding that denial the Court declared the right and established the plaintiffs' claim. It is now contended that inasmuch as the defendants or their representatives-in-interest filed that written statement in 1877, the right of the plaintiffs must be deemed to have become extinguished on the expiry of twelve years from that date. In our opinion Article 131 bears no such meaning as is contended for. That Article means no more than this; that if a party entitled to claim malikana is refused the enjoyment of his right after demand, he must establish his right by suit brought within twelve years from the date of such refusal. In this case the plaintiffs brought a suit to establish their right and as between them and the present defendants the right has been established and the decree in that suit is res judicata between the parties. The case reported as Gopinath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad (1) clearly lays this down. In a suit for malikana the issue between the parties substantially raises the question of the proprietary right to the estate in respect of which malikana is claimed, and when the question of the proprietary right has been decided in a previous suit between the same parties, a subsequent suit for malikana will be barred as res judicata. Subsequent suits were brought in 1882 and 1894, all upon the basis that the right to claim malikana existed and the suits were for the recovery of a money demand based on that right. The case reported as Roaji v. Bala (2) also demonstrates that the construction which we have put upon section 131 is the true and right construction. At page 141 of the report their Lordships say: "Article 131, Schedule II, of Act IX of 1871, requires a plaintiff, who seeks to establish a periodically recurring right, to bring his suit within twelve years from the date when he was first refused the enjoyment of his right. If such plaintiff were to allow this period to elapse, without suing to establish his right, he could not be allowed indirectly to accomplish the same object by bringing a suit for arrears falling due within the period of limitation. But while this is the rule, which must be applied to cases in which a plaintiff must establish his title, before he can ask for arrears accruing due under such title, it does not appear to us that the same rule applies, when, as in the present case, the plaintiff has already in a former suit obtained a decree declaratory of his title." This ruling was applied and followed in Calcutta by Mr. Justice Mukherji.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA V. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

In the present case we are not concerned with the effect of Article 131, inasmuch as the plaintiffs' right has already been declared by the decree obtained in 1877 and that decree is res judicata as between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The plaintiffs are, therefore, clearly entitled to recover the amount they claim. They are entitled to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 75 8-0 which represents the arrears of malikana for three years preceding the institution of the suit, which was instituted on the 20th of September 1910. Accordingly the decision of the lower Appellate Court is affirmed, and the plaintiffs' suit is decreed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES NOS. 495,
AND 544 OF 1914 AND NOS 268 AND 275 OF 1915.
April 3, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and
Mr. Justice Newbould.

SRIMATI SYAM PEARY DASSYA WIDOW OF MADHUSUDAN DASS, AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2 —APPELLANTS

versus

THE EASTERN MORTGAGE AND AGENCY COMPANY, LTD., AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Pardanashin lady, deed executed by—Proof—Clause restraining alienation by mortgagor, operation of—Necessity—Reversioners, consent of, value of—Presumption—Charge, whether can be created without specific description of property—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—"Specific immoveable property"—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Penalty —Stipulation to pay interest at higher rate on default

(1) 10 C. 697; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 468.

(2) 15 B. 135; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 91.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

of payment of lower rate—Court, power of, to give relief—Mortgage suit—Paramount title, whether can be gone into.

In considering the question whether there was intelligent execution of a deed by a pardanashin lady, the circumstances under which the transaction took place should be borne in mind. [p. 869, col. 2.]

The mere translating the deed or communicating the substance thereof to the pardanashin lady is not sufficient. [p. 870, col. 1.]

To make it binding upon her it must be shown that the deed was interpreted and explained to her. [p. 870, col. 2.]

Where a deed of English mortgage written out in English was read out and explained to a pardanashin Hindu widow before she executed it in the presence of her own people, and the reversionary heirs witnessed the execution and were consenting parties to it:

Held, that the deed was binding upon the lady. [p. 871, col. 2.]

The clause restraining alienation of the mortgaged property, which is generally inserted in mortgage bonds in this country, does not prevent alienation subject to the rights of the mortgagee. [p. 870, col. 2.]

The consent given by the reversioners to a mortgage executed by a Hindu widow raises a presumption of the existence of legal necessity, even where a sum of money is paid to one of the reversioners for obtaining his consent. [p. 872, col. 2; p. 873, col. 1.]

Where the operative part of an ekranama, executed by a person in whose favour a lady released her claim to a certain share of a property, stated that the lady was to get an annuity from the said share and was entitled to recover it by suit from the share:

Held, that the annuity was made a charge upon the share, even though there was no specification of the property in the schedule attached to the ekranama, as the property was easily ascertainable without such schedule. [p. 874, col. 1.]

There is no reason why a general description of the property should be held not to constitute a charge if the description, though wide, is not uncertain. [p. 874, col. 1.]

The question whether a charge was or was not created upon a certain property is one of intention. In equity no charge can be created unless there is an intent to charge. [p. 875, col. 1.]

Semble.—Difficulty might arise in the case of a mortgage from a general description of the mortgaged property, as a mortgage under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act must be of "specific immoveable property." [p. 875, col. 1.]

A stipulation to pay interest at a higher rate on default of punctual payments of interest at a lower rate is a penalty. But in the converse case, i. e., where the stipulation is for a certain rate of interest which would be reduced to a lower rate, if punctually paid, the stipulation for the higher rate would not be treated as a penalty, although if the question were res integra there is no reason why the stipulation for the higher rate of interest should not be regarded as a penalty in both cases. [p. 877, col. 1.]

Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act does away with the distinction between penalty and liquidated damages, and under the section, as amended by Act

VI of 1899, the Court has the power to grant relief if the contract contains any stipulation by way of penalty, even where the contract was entered into before the amendment by Act VI of 1899. [p. 877, col. 2.]

Where a mortgage-deed stipulated for the payment of interest at 9½ per cent. to be reduced to 7½ per cent. on punctual payment, but the scheme for liquidation of the mortgage debt, which was a material part of the deed, showed that interest was calculated at 7½ per cent. only:

Held, that, as it appeared from the construction of the mortgage deed taken together with the scheme that the intention of the parties was that interest should be paid at 7½ per cent. and on default at 9½ per cent., the mortgagees could not recover interest at more than 7½ per cent. but that they were entitled to reasonable compensation for non-payment of interest punctually—which compensation would be interest at 7½ per cent. on the interest which was not punctually paid. [p. 877, col. 2.]

In a suit upon a mortgage no question of title paramount to the mortgaged property should be gone into. [p. 888, col. 1.]

IN NOS. 267 & 268 OF 1915.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Dacca, dated the 13th March 1915.

IN NOS. 495 & 544 OF 1914.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Dacca, dated the 25th May 1914.

Sir Rash Behary Ghose, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Basanta Kumar Bose, Bipin Behary Ghose, Surendra Nath Ghosal, Suresh Chandra Das and Satish Chandra Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Mr. B.C. Mitter and Babus Prorash Chandra Mitter and Ambika Pada Chowdhury, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two suits instituted by the Eastern Mortgage & Agency Company, Limited, on the basis of two separate mortgages executed by one Priomoyee Dasi and Mohini Mohan Das respectively. Appeal No. 495 of 1914 is against the preliminary decree in the suit to enforce the mortgage executed by Priomoyee Dasi and Appeal No. 268 of 1915 is against the final decree in that suit, while Appeal No. 544 of 1914 is against the preliminary decree in the suit to enforce the mortgage executed by Mohini Mohan Das and Appeal No. 275 of 1915 is against the final decree in that suit.

The mortgaged properties originally belonged to one Modusudan Das, who died in April 1865 leaving his widow Sham Peary

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Dasi the defendant No. 1 in the suits and five sons Mohini Mohan, Radhika Mohan, Lal Mohan, Khetra Mohan and Shosi Mohan, Shosi Mohan died unmarried and intestate on the 1st October 1865 and his one-fifth share thereupon devolved upon his mother Sham Peary. By an ekrar, dated the 29th September 1877, Sham Peary gave up the share inherited by her in favour of her sons, the document being executed in favour of Mohini Mohan who was the executor of the estate, for natural affection and in consideration of his paying an annuity of Rs. 1,800 a year, Mohini Mohan also executing an ekrar in her favour. One of the questions raised in the case is whether the said annuity is a first charge upon the said share. Mohini Mohan, whose original share was increased to a four annas by the surrender by Sham Peary, subsequently acquired the four-annas share of Khetra Mohan so that his total share became 8 annas. The third brother, Lal Mohan, died on the 18th December 1885 and his four-annas share was inherited by his widow, Priomoyee. The second brother Radhika Mohan had a four-annas share, but this litigation has nothing to do with that share.

On the 22nd September 1890, Mohini Mohan executed a mortgage in favour of the Eastern Mortgage & Agency Company, Limited, (who may be conveniently referred to as the Company) for Rs. 2,50,000, mortgaging his eight-annas share and executed a deed of management of the property in favour of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, through whom the loan was raised. On the 7th November 1890 Priomoyee executed a mortgage for Rs. 1, 20,000 in favour of the said Company in respect of her four-annas share.

The main provisions of the mortgage deed are that the deed is to be construed as an English mortgage as defined by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and the mortgagees shall have and exercise all the rights and remedies of an English mortgagee expressly including the power of sale, that the interest is to be at the rate of $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. payable half yearly, but that on punctual payment interest would be charged at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., that until the mortgagees entered into possession the mortgaged properties shall be managed entirely (and without any interference whatever by the mortgagor) by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall so long as they fulfilled the terms and conditions, in the event of the death, resignation or dismissal of either of them by the survivor of them or failing such survivor by another duly qualified manager to be nominated by the mortgagees, the manager to have the fullest powers for the proper management and improvement, including the power to appoint and dismiss all servants and to make settlements with rai-yats and farmers and to give leases and to institute and conduct and defend suits and will not be liable to dismissal except for misconduct or neglect of duty proved to the satisfaction of the mortgagees. The mortgagor shall not in any event execute any documents for the sale, mortgage or permanent lease or other alienation of any part of the mortgaged properties without the written concurrence of the mortgagees, "it being the intention of the parties and being of the essence of the negotiation for the grant of the said loan that the mortgagor shall in no way interfere with the management of the mortgaged premises." The managers in the first place were to pay the Government revenue and other outgoings, and in the second place to pay to the mortgagees interest at the times stated and in the third to pay all proper costs and charges for management and realization of rents and auditing and scrutinizing by professional auditors chosen by the mortgagees (if they think necessary) and in the fourth place to pay Rs. 2,400 to the mortgagor. The managers shall render to the mortgagee such accounts and information and such statements as to rent roll, etc., as may be called for by the mortgagees. If the manager for the time being fails to apply any part of the rents and profits in the manner provided by the deed the mortgagees may appoint (upon such salary or remuneration and with such powers of management as they shall think proper) such person as they in their absolute discretion shall think fit to be Receiver, and the mortgagees at their absolute discretion may from time to time suspend, remove or dismiss any Receiver and appoint another Receiver in his place. The power to appoint a Receiver shall not prejudice or affect any of the rights or remedies of the mortgagees as mortgagees and they shall not be liable for any loss or misapplication of the rent and profits by reason of any default, neglect or misappropriation of any manager or Receiver, and any Receiver, appointed as aforesaid, shall be forthwith discharged by the mortgagees and the property shall be again managed as hereinbefore provided by a manager upon the mortgagor making good the deficiency on default in consequence of which the Receiver was appointed and upon the mortgagor paying all the expenses incurred in connection with the appointment and during the employment of the Receiver.

SHAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

A scheme was prepared for the liquidation of the debts and set out in the schedule, according to which the principal and interest were to be paid off by the year 1317.

It is unnecessary to state the provisions of the mortgage bond executed by Mohini Mohan Das except that they were similar.

A deed of management was simultaneously executed by Priyomoyee giving full powers of management to Messrs. Garth & Weatherall; the terms being similar to those of the deed of management executed by Mohini Mohan Das on the 22nd September 1890.

Subsequently a deed of trust was executed by Priyomoyee Dasi on the 7th April 1897 in favour of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall for the better management of the properties. The property was accordingly managed by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, and for a few years payments were made by them of the principal and interest as provided in the scheme, then the payments became less. The sum of Rs. 2,400 which was to be paid to Priyomoyee was paid until the year 1898 and was then stopped. On the 10th February 1898 a deed of endowment was executed by Priyomoyee in favour of a deity (Pryabullas) by which certain property was dedicated to it, and on the 14th December 1902 by a second deed of endowment certain other properties were dedicated by her to the deity. She died on the next day, the 15th December 1902.

Mr. Garth died on the 16th June 1904 and on his death the property was managed by Mr. Weatherall. He left for England on the 13th April 1908 and obtained a release on the 26th November 1908 from Sham Peary Dasi in consideration of Mr. Weatherall undertaking to appoint one Mr. Lockhart as trustee in his place. Mr. Lockhart was allowed to manage her estate and he remained in possession as manager in succession to Mr. Weatherall.

Priyomoyee died on the 15th December 1902 and Mohini Mohan died on the 28th December 1896 and thereupon their shares devolved upon Sham Peary, the mother of Mohini Mohan.

The suits upon the two mortgages were brought by the Company against Sham Peary as defendant No. 1 and Motilal Das, son of Khetra Mohun Das and who as the reversionary heir was joined as the defendant No. 2. The suits were decreed by the Court below, and the defendants have appealed to this Court.

The questions raised in the appeal which arises out of the suit upon Priyomoyee's mortgage are: 1st, whether there was intelligent execution of the mortgage deed and the deed of management by Priyomoyee and had she independent advice in the matter: 2nd, was the deed of mortgage properly attested within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act: 3rd, whether there was legal necessity for Rs. 25,000 out of the one lac and twenty thousand raised upon the mortgage: 4th, whether the annuity of Rs. 1,800 a year in favour of Sham Peary is a charge upon the 4 annas share of the mortgaged properties: 5th, whether the stipulation to pay interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, in case the interest was not paid punctually, is or is not a penalty: 6th, whether Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagor or the mortgagees and whether it is competent to a mortgagee in this country to nominate and appoint an agent to manage the mortgaged premises for the purpose of relieving himself from the liability to which a mortgagee is subject when he enters into possession of the mortgaged properties. The last three questions are common to both the suits.

The first question for consideration, therefore, is whether there was intelligent execution of the mortgage deed and the deed of management by Priyomoyee and had she independent advice. The mortgage-deed was executed in the presence of Kunja Behary Das the maternal uncle of the lady and Mohini Mohan Das her brother-in-law, and it was read over and explained to her by Babu Iswar Chandra Ghose, Pleader. The document bears an endorsement by Mohini Mohan Das and Khetra Mohan Das the then reversioners, who gave their consent stating that the arrangement was necessary.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

In considering these transactions the circumstances under which they took place should be borne in mind. Both Priyomoyee and Mohini Mohan Das had debts due for very large amounts to Ruplal and Raghunath Das, the amount due by Priyomoyee being Rs. 95,000 and that due by Mohini Mohan about Rs. 2,50,000. Mohini Mohan had borrowed Rs. 2,50,000 from the plaintiff Company through Messrs. Garth & Weatherall only two months before and he had to pay a commission of 10 per cent. to those gentlemen for raising the loan. He had appointed them as managers of the estate which was mortgaged on certain terms. Ruplal and Raghunath Das had obtained a decree against Priyomoyee and proceedings in execution were pending. She tried to raise money elsewhere but did not succeed. It appears that under these circumstances her uncle Kunja Behary asked Mohini Babu to procure advance of money from the plaintiff Company, and Mohini Babu said that he could induce the plaintiff Company to advance money on conditions on which he himself had borrowed money from the Company. Those conditions were that 10 per cent. of the money borrowed from the Company was to be paid to Messrs. Garth and Weatherall who would manage the estate, the interest payable being $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to be reduced in case of punctual payment to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The evidence shows that Priyomoyee then called in her cousin Babu Debendra Nath Das (a Pleader), her Dewan Bhagawan Ghose and Kunja Babu her maternal uncle and after consulting them settled to borrow money from the plaintiff Company on such conditions. Afterwards Messrs. Garth & Weatherall and Mohini Babu came to the house of Priyomoyee and she offered to borrow Rs. 1,20,000 from the plaintiff Company. Two drafts, one of the mortgage deed and the other of the deed of management, were then sent by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall to the lady. They were practically on the same terms as those executed by Mohini Mohan, the only difference being that out of the balance of the profits of the property Rs. 2,400 a year were to be paid to the lady whereas in the case of Mohini Mohan, the balance of the profits was to be divided half and half between him and Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. Mohini Mohan appears to have been a leading banker at Dacca. He was an adult male and mixed in European and Indian societies. If he could not raise the loan on better terms, it is not to be expected that the lady could do so herself. It was under these circumstances that the documents were executed. The drafts were taken to Iswar Babu who was one of the leading Pleaders of Dacca and was her legal adviser. He "touched up" the drafts, and interpreted them in Bengali to the lady. We do not think that the case of Annoda Mohun Rai Chowdhri v. Bhuban Mohini Debi (1) relied upon on behalf of the appellants applies to the present case. In that case the mortgage bond was read out fluently (i. e., without stopping anywhere) to a purdanashin lady and there was no evidence to show that the document was explained to her at all. In the present case the drafts (which are in English) were interpreted to Priyomoyee by reading 2 to 4 lines at a time, and it took about 3 hours to do so. Ten or twelve days afterwards the deeds were executed when they were again explained to her by giving out the substance of each of the deeds in Bengali. She was surrounded by her own people. There was, as already stated, her relation Babu Debendra Nath Das (a Pleader, banker and zemindar), and Kunja Behary her maternal uncle was also there and these two gentlemen used to look after her affairs. Her old servant Ganga Narain was also there. Babu Iswar Chandra Ghose, a Pleader of the family, advised her and explained the drafts and the deeds to her, and the reversionary heirs Mohini Mohan and Khetra Mohan were present at the execution of the deeds and were consenting parties to the arrangement. It is true that Babu Iswar Chandra was the Pleader of Mr. Garth also, and it is urged that he was not a proper person to advise the lady. It would have been better had some other Pleader been engaged for the purpose. But as we have said, the terms were almost the same as those of the deeds executed by the lady's brother-in-law Mohini Mohan. Then, again, the lady had only a widow's interest in the estate. Mohini Mohan and Khetra Mohan

(1) 28 C. 546; 11 M. L. J. 164; 28 I. A 71; 5 C. W. N. 459; 3 Bom. L. R. 386; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 58 (P. C.).

SYAM PEARY DASSYA V. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

were the reversionary heirs and it was certainly their interest to protect the estate which would ultimately come to them or to their heirs. They gave their consent and the consent is endorsed on the documents themselves. It is true the lady consented to the draft being adopted on the Pleader Iswar Babu assuring her that the deeds would not prejudice her. But having regard to the fact that her brother-in-law Mohini Mohan had already entered into a similar arrangement, and no better arrangement could be secured elsewhere, the Pleader cannot be said to be wrong in saying what he said to the lady. The Pleader told the lady that the properties would come back to her by 1317. That no doubt was the expectation of the parties, but it was nothing more than this, that according to the scheme the debt due would be paid off by 1317, there was no guarantee that she would get back the property if for any miscalculation or untoward circumstances, the debt was not paid off by 1317. We will presently refer to what the lady said in later documents on the point. It is contended, however, that there is nothing to show that the Pleader Iswar Babu explained to Priyomoyee, a young pardanashin lady, the position in which she was placing herself, that she could not dismiss Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, however fraudulent their conduct might be, unless the mortgagees were satisfied of such misconduct, that the mortgagees would not be accountable for any loss which might be due to the default or misconduct of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall and that such loss would fall upon herself; there is also nothing to show that the attention of the lady was drawn to the clause in the mortgage bond that a Receiver could be appointed with such powers of management as the mortgagees thought proper, nor is there anything to show that the Pleader told her that the power of sale and the clause restraining alienation of the property by the mortgagor was void in law.

It is no doubt true that the mere translating deeds or communicating the substance thereof to a pardanashin lady is not sufficient. But the evidence shows, as stated above, that the drafts were interpreted and explained to her by the Pleader Iswar Babu. The powers given to Messrs. Garth &

Weatherall and the liabilities of the parties concerned were expressly stated in the deeds, and if they were properly interpreted and explained (and there is no reason to think that they were not) the lady became aware of the provisions. The clause restraining alienation of the mortgaged property is generally inserted in mortgage bonds in this country, though of course it does not prevent alienation subject to the rights of the mortgagee.

The question of intelligent execution has been raised 24 years after the execution of the deeds. The Pleader who explained the deeds to the lady, Kunja Behary, her uncle and the reversionary heirs, Mohini Mohan and Khetra Mohan, are all dead. At this distance of time it cannot be expected that the witnesses should remember the details of what the Pleader stated to the lady and the witnesses Debendra Nath and Ganga Narain do not remember the words which the Pleader Iswar Babu used in interpreting the drafts or giving out the substance of deeds and are unable to give the details. But even assuming that the Pleader had not drawn the attention of the lady to all the provisions of the deed and to the precise position in which she was placing herself by appointing Messrs. Garth & Weatherall nominated by the mortgagees on the conditions stated in the mortgage deed and the deed of management, we do not think, having regard to the fact that her own brother-in-law Mohini Mohan had under similar circumstances to raise money by executing a mortgage and a deed of management on practically the same terms, that the Pleader's advice on the matters referred to above would really have made any difference in the result.

No doubt it is difficult to explain an English mortgage specially to a pardanashin lady, and had the deeds of mortgage and management stood alone, there might be force in some of the arguments addressed on behalf of the appellants, and we might have attached more importance to the fact that the lady agreed to the arrangement on her being assured that the estate would come back by 1317. But there are subsequent documents executed by the lady and they leave no room for doubt that she was aware of her position under the deeds. In 1897 she executed a deed of trust (Exhibit 7) in favour of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall (by which the deed of management was revoked), in which the deed of mortgage was referred to. The trust deed, which fully set out the powers of management given to those gentlemen and which were more extensive than those given in the deed of management, was interpreted and explained to her by the Pleader Iswar Babu and the witness Kalidyal Ghose. This document, however, was also in English and is an elaborate one. But then she executed a deed of endowment on the 10th February 1903, i.e., about eighteen years after the deeds of mortgage and management were executed, there is a recital in it of the circumstances under which deeds of mortgage and management were executed. Then again, in Exhibit 2 (another deed of endowment) executed by the lady on the 24th December 1902, that is 12 years after the mortgage, there is also a recital of the arrangement entered into under the deeds of mortgage and management. It is stated in the latter deed that "if no untoward circumstance intervened" the entire debts of her husband would have been liquidated in a short time and under that impression she had placed the management of the properties in the hands of two European gentlemen; but that "unfortunately on account of various adverse circumstances intervening in the management of the properties" the allowance granted for her maintenance had been stopped since 1898. It appears, therefore, that although the money payable under the mortgage had not been paid as stipulated in the mortgage deed, and although her own allowance had been stopped for several years, there was no complaint in either of the said two documents that she had executed the deeds of mortgage and management without properly understanding them. On the other hand, they go to show that the lady was fully aware of the arrangement made by the deeds of mortgage and management. These two deeds of endowment were in the Bengali language. There is evidence to show (and the evidence is one-sided) that they were read over and explained to her and she had the advice of her maternal uncle Kunja Behary and her relations and servants when she executed them. Babu Ananda Charan Roy, another leading Pleader of Dacca, appears to have been consulted in connection with the deed of endowment Exhibit 11. There is an endorsement on the deed by Khetra Mohan Das the then sole reversioner, which runs as follows:—"Having learnt and understood the contents of this deed with the advice of my well-wishers and friends and on a full consideration of my personal interests I give my full consent to this gift." It was attested by the Pleaders Iswar Babu and Debendra Babu besides four other Pleaders and several other persons, and Exhibit 12 the second deed of endowment was also attested by Pleaders Debendra Nath and Ananda Chandra, her servant Radha Ballav, her maternal uncle Kunja Behary and several other persons. It is true the lady died the day after she executed the deed of endowment Exhibit 12, but no case was made in the Court below that she did not understand the contents of the deed. The lady died in 1902, so that she lived for twelve years after the execution of the mortgage. During all these years the deeds of mortgage and management were never challenged by the lady. On the contrary their validity was recognized by her in the deeds of endowment. Not only is that so, but the defendant No. 1 Sham Peary Dasya herself never challenged it before the present suit. Having regard to all these circumstances, we are of opinion that the first contention on behalf of the appellants must be overruled.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

The next question is whether the deed of mortgage was properly attested within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The deed bears the names of Mohini Mohan Das and Kunja Behary Das as attesting witnesses and there is an attestation clause which runs thus:—"Signed, sealed and delivered by the above-named Srimati Priyomoyee Dassi in the presence of Kunja Behary Das and Mohini Mohan Das, and after the deed was read and explained by Babu Iswar Chandra Ghose, Pleader, she being identified also by them, Mohini Mohan Das, Kunja Behary Das." Both Mohini Mohan and Kunja Behary are dead. Babu Debendra Nath Das (Pleader) a cousin of Priyomoyee, in whose presence she executed the deed, has been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs. It is true he is not an attesting witness but he says that both

SYAM PEARY DASSYA V. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Mohini Mohan and Kunja Behary were present when Priyomoyee affixed her signature on the deed. We are referred to a passage in his cross-examination where he said, "Priyomoyee was in a south room where we all including Iswar Babu were, while he read the Exhibit 5 and gave out its purport somebody took the Exhibit 5 inside the south room and she signed it in my presence and in the presence of some others whom I forget." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that as the witness says that she signed the deed in the presence of "some others" whose names he has forgotten, there is no evidence that she signed it in the presence of Mohini Mohan and Kunja Behary. A few lines after that, however, the witness says, "Mohini Babu and Kunja Babu signed the Exhibit 5 as its witnesses in the room in which we all sat." And the witness in his examination-in-chief is positive in his statement that Priyomoyee signed the mortgage bond in the presence of Mohini Mohan, Kunja Behary and himself. The words "some others" must, therefore, be taken to refer to some persons other than Mohini Mohan and Kunja Behary. We are also referred to the evidence of Ganga Narain Bose where he stated, "Kunja Babu and Debendra took the deeds inside the room in which Priyomoyee was, to secure her signature thereon. Priyomoyee signed the mortgage deed at that time.....Iswar Babu, Kunja Babu and Mohini Babu signed the mortgage deed as its attesting witnesses." It is contended that both the attesting witnesses Kunja and Mohini Mohan cannot be said to have been present when she signed the mortgage deed. But there is the positive evidence of the Pleader Debendra Babu, and having regard to the distance of time at which the witnesses were giving their depositions no better evidence on the point could reasonably be expected. There is no specific plea taken in the written statement that there was no proper attestation of the mortgage deed; but the sixth paragraph thereof in which the defendant put the plaintiff to prove the due execution of the mortgage may cover such a plea. However, having regard to the evidence adduced, we think it sufficiently proved that the mortgage deed was attested by the two witnesses Mohini Mohan and Kunja Behary.

The third contention raises the question whether there was legal necessity for the whole amount. Legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 95,000 is admitted, that being the debt which was due under a bond executed by the husband of the lady in favour of Rupalal and Raghunath Das; and the said debt was paid off out of the consideration for the mortgage bond advanced by the plaintiff Company. The only question, therefore, is whether there was necessity for the balance namely Rs. 25,000. The evidence shows that out of one lac and twenty thousand Mr. Garth deducted his commission Rs. 12,000 and paid the balance of Rs. 1,03,000 to Kunja Babu, the uncle of the lady. So there remains Rs. 13,000 to be accounted for. The mortgage deed in reciting the necessity for the loan refers to the debt created by the husband of the lady and "also certain other moneys due to Sreemuty Syam Peary Dassya, the mother of the late Babu Lal Mohan Das, and which are the first charge upon the said estate." It is contended on behalf of the appellant, first, that it is not shown that it was absolutely necessary for the lady to pay a commission of Rs. 12,000 to Mr. Garth for raising the loan; and, secondly, that there were, in fact, decrees obtained by Syam Peary which the lady had to pay and they were, in fact, paid out of the consideration. In dealing with the question of legal necessity, however, we must bear in mind that the then reversioners Mohini Mohan and Khetra Mohan gave their full consent to the mortgage. There is an endorsement on the mortgage bond which runs as follows:—"We, Mohini Mohan Das and Khetra Mohan Das, both having reversionary interest in the estates set out in the schedule above written and being fully cognisant of the terms of the above mortgage deed, hereby notify that we consent to the same as being an arrangement necessary for the saving of the estate from sale and we agree to abide by the terms thereof," and the execution of this note was admitted by them before the Registrar. The consent given by the reversioners would certainly raise a presumption of the existence of the necessity [see Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (2)]. In the recent case,

(2) 19 Ind Cas. 273; 40 C. 721; 17 C. W. N. 70; 17 C. L. J. 499.

SHYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (3), the Judicial Committee observed that the requirement of the law that an alienation by a Hindu widow must be proved to have been made by her for valid and legal necessity, (the onus of proving which rests heavily on the alienee) may be fulfilled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to the transaction, which consent, however, must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings they concurred in binding their interests."

It is pointed out that Rs. 500 was paid to Khetra Mohan for obtaining his consent. But the mere fact that Rs. 500 was paid to one of the reversioners does not, we think, rebut the presumption as to existence of the legal necessity arising from the consent given by reversioners. So far as the payment of Rs. 12,000 to Mr. Garth is concerned, we do not think it can be contended that there was no necessity for such payment. Mohini Mohan, the brother-in-law of the lady, only two months before raised a loan of Rs. 2,50,000 through Messrs. Garth & Weatherall and he had to pay 10 per cent. commission to them. If Mohini Mohan had to pay that commission, it cannot be expected that the lady could raise the loan on payment of commission at a lower rate. The 10 per cent. commission, it must be remembered, included the costs of stamps, registration and other incidental expenses. However that may be, we think that, in the circumstances, it cannot be said that there was no necessity for payment of the sum of Rs. 12,000 as commission. Then as to the payment of the decrees of Shyam Peary, it is true that the copies of the execution proceedings have not been produced. But the plaintiffs have proved that the records of the execution cases brought by Shyam Peary had been destroyed, and were not in existence. The plaintiffs have also examined Ganga Narain Bose who was in the service of the lady, and he stated that Shyam Peary obtained five or six decrees for her maintenance against her sons or their representatives and that she had realised all the debts from Priyomoyee, Rs. 3,300 or 3,400. Rupees 1,500 and 1,600 were paid to Shyam Peary in satisfaction of two decrees in his presence out of the moneys borrowed on the mortgage bond. It was the defendant Shyam Peary to whom these payments are said to have been made. Her servant Radha Bullav was actually present in Court and looking after the case on her behalf. But he was not examined nor any account books produced by her to show that the moneys were not paid to her in satisfaction of her decrees for maintenance. The ekrarnama, Exhibit A, dated the 29th September 1877 shows that Rs. 150 per month was payable to Shyam Peary. It is more likely that she would proceed against her daughter-in-law and not against her son for realising the said annuity and the deed of endowment, Exhibit 11, executed by Priyomoyee states that Shyam Peary had obtained decree for a large sum of money due to her on account of her allowance against Mohini Mohan and others and was about to recover the money by executing it against herself alone. Having regard to the fact that the moneys due to Shyam Peary were recited in the mortgage bond as "immediate, pressing necessity" and that the reversioners who had full knowledge of the terms gave consent to it as an arrangement necessary for saving the estate from sale, we think the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is sufficient for proving legal necessity. Then, in the release, dated the 26th November 1908, executed by Shyam Peary herself in favour of Mr. Weatherall, there is an admission that Priyomoyee obtained a loan of Rs. 1,20,000 from the plaintiff. There is a similar statement in the agreement executed by her in favour of Mr. Lockhart on the same day. Radha Ballav Das, her am-muktear, who was looking after the case on her behalf was a witness to the deed of release and the deed was drafted by Babu Ananda Chandra Roy, Pleader, at the instance of the said Radha Ballav. The fact that Rs. 1,08,000 (after deducting the commission to Mr. Garth) was paid to the lady was never challenged during the lifetime of Priyomoyee; on the contrary, it was admitted by her in subsequent documents and lastly by Shyam Peary herself in that deed of release. Having regard to the positive evidence and the circumstances, we think that the Court below is right in holding that there was legal necessity for the entire amount advanced under the mortgage.

(3) 27 Ind. Cas. 674; 42 I. A. 64; 17 M. L. T. 115; 19 C. W. N. 370; 13 A. L. J. 223; 2 L. W. 219; 21 C. L. J. 225; 28 M. L. J. 565; 17 Bom. L. R. 426; (1915) M. W. N. 511; 42 C. 876 (P. C.).

SYAM PEARY DASSYA V. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

The next question is whether the annuity agreed upon to be paid to Shyam Peary is a charge upon the share of the estate which she inherited from her son Soshi Mohan. The ekrarnama executed by Mohini Mohan Das recites that there was some litigation over the said share, that she was intending to institute a regular civil suit for recovery of the share, and that she expressed her willingness to give up her claim to the share on receipt of a monthly allowance of Rs. 150 by executing a ladani to that effect. The operative part of the deed then states as follows:—"You shall receive Rs. 150 net during your lifetime from the aforesaid share, you shall not be able to make a gift, sale, bai, heba, of it. Myself and the succeeding executor shall pay you the aforesaid money every month and if I or they do not pay it you shall be entitled to recover it by suit from the share left by my aforesaid deceased brother."

It will be seen that the lady was to get the annuity from the aforesaid share, and entitled to recover it by suit from the share, and we have no doubt having regard to the terms of the deed that the annuity was made a charge upon the share. The only reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge for holding otherwise is that the property is not specified in the deed. But the property can be easily ascertained, and that being so, it does not matter that no schedule of property is given in the deed. In the case of Ramsidh Pande v. Balgobind (4), where the debtor had pledged all her "wealth and property" to her creditor, it was held that the maxim "certum est quod certum reddi potest" applied, overruling the contention that the property was not described by metes and bounds or by name.

The description is no doubt wide, but not uncertain. As pointed out by Cotton, L. J., in Montague v. Earl of Sandwich (5), "I think it is an established rule, that where the covenant is to charge the real estate, which can be ascertained by existing facts and circumstances, for example if there is a covenant to charge all the real estate which a man has at a particular time, that covenant will itself make a charge. But where the covenant is to charge, not all or any definite portion of a man's estate, but only that which is worth £1,000 a year, or which would be sufficient to secure £1,000 a year, then from the indefiniteness of the matter referred to there will be no charge unless an instrument is afterwards executed to give effect to the covenant; and it remains simply a covenant to be enforced as against the assets of the covenantor."

In some cases in our Court a general description of property has been held not to constitute a charge. See Gunoo Singh v. Latofut Hossain (6), Najibulla Mulla v. Nusrat Mistri (7) and Jagatdhar Narain Prasad v. A. M. Brown (8). But in the first case there was merely a covenant not to alienate any property of the debtor until payment of the money advanced, and there were no expressions to indicate an intention to charge any property. In the second it was observed that a charge can only be created where specific property is mentioned. But as pointed out in the Tagore Lectures, 1876, at page 172 (foot note), "But this dictum seems to be based upon a misapprehension of a passage in Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, to the effect that a covenant to convey and settle lands will not be a specific lien on the lands of the covenantor, a proposition which is deduced by the learned author from the case of Mornington v. Keane (9), where there was a covenant merely to settle lands of a particular value which, as pointed out by the Lord Chancellor, was a very different thing from a covenant to charge either the whole or a definite portion of a person's estate. But the decision itself may perhaps be supported on the ground that there was no intention on the part of the grantor to create any charge whatever on his property."

(4) 9 A. 158; A. W. N. (1887) 15; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 538.

(5) (1886) 32 Ch. D. 525; 55 L. J. Ch. 935, 54 L. T. 602.

(6) 3 C. 336; 1 C. L. R. 91; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 801.

(7) 7 C. 196; 8 C. L. R. 454; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 675.

(8) 33 C. 1133; 10 C. W. N. 1010; 4 C. L. J. 121.

(9) (1858) 2 De G. & J. 192; 27 L. J. Ch. 791; 4 Jur. (N. S.) 981; 6 W. R. 434; 44 E. R. 1001; 119 R. R. 134.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

In the third case the bond stated that if the creditor failed to repay the loan the creditor would be entitled to recover the debt by sale of "the Nyagaon Factory" and from "his (the debtor's) person and other properties," and it was held that it was a general admission of liability which was merely that the creditor could recover his debt as provided under the law and created no special lien on the Nyagaon Factory.

It is to be observed that the question in all such cases is one of intention. "In equity no charge can be created unless there is an intent to charge:" see Omrao Begum v. Secretary of State (10).

It will further be observed that in all the above three cases the question raised was whether there was a mortgage which, under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, must be of "specific immoveable property," and difficulty in such a case is likely to arise from a general description.

In the last two cases noticed above the learned Judges relied upon the fact that the document was not registered in Book I (which is a register of documents relating to immoveable properties) but in Book IV as showing the intention of the parties not to create any charge.

It is unnecessary, however, to discuss this question further, as in the present case the plaintiff admitted the existence of the charge in the mortgage deed itself. In stating the necessity for the loan taken by Priyomoyee, the indenture of mortgage states, "certain other moneys due to Shyam Peary Dasya the mother of the late Babu Lal Mohan Das and which are a first charge upon the said estate."

Then again in the plaint itself there is a clear and distinct admission by the plaintiffs themselves that the annuity was a first charge. In the first paragraph of the plaint the plaintiffs refer to the moneys due to Shyam Peary as being "a first charge upon the estate of late Lal Mohan Das." The plaintiffs, therefore, actually took the mortgage subject to the charge. We are accordingly of opinion that the annuity of Rs. 1,800 a year in favour of Shyam Peary is a charge upon the share which she inherited from her son Lal Mohan, and that the plaintiffs' mortgage is subject to that charge.

The fifth question is whether the stipulation to pay interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is in the nature of a penalty. The mortgage deed provided that interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was to be paid by equal half yearly payments, but that if the interest at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was paid before the half yearly day appointed for payments of interest, the mortgagees shall accept the same in lieu and in satisfaction of interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. If the stipulation was to pay interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and on default of payment on a certain date interest was to be paid at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. there is no doubt that it could be treated as a penalty. In the converse case it would not be a penalty according to English Law. In Wallis v. Smith (11) Jessel, M. R., referring to the rule of equity stated by Mr. Justice Heath in Hardy v. Martin (12), viz., that "It is a well-known rule in equity that if a mortgage covenant be to pay £ 5 per cent., and if the interest be paid on certain days then to be reduced to £ 4 per cent., the Court of Chancery will not relieve if the early day be suffered to pass without payment; but if the covenant be to pay £ 4 per cent., and if the party do not pay at a certain time, it shall be raised to £ 5 per cent., then the Court of Chancery will relieve," observed: "It was settled so early as that, I am sorry that it was so settled, because anything more irrational than the doctrine I think can hardly be stated. It entirely depended on form and not on substance."

On behalf of the defendants we were referred to the case of Union Bank of London v. Ingram (13) where Jessel, M. R., held that a mortgagee in possession is entitled on accounts being taken to charge the mortgagor with the higher rate of interest under a proviso in the mortgage deed for reduction of interest on punctual payment. In the case of Wallingford v. Mutual

(11) (1882) 21 Ch. D. 243; 47 L. T. 389; 52 L. J. Ch. 145; 31 W. R. 214.

(12) (1783) 1 Bro. C. C. 419n; 28 E. R. 1214

(13) (1881) 16 Ch. D. 53; 50 L. J. Ch. 74; 43 L. T. 659; 29 W. R. 209.

(10) 19 L. A. 95; 19 C. 584; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 192; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 832 (P. C.).

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Society (14) Lord Hatherley observed (see page 702):—"The form adopted long since—I do not know whether it is still continued or not—in mortgages was when you wished to reserve in reality interest at 4 per cent. to reserve the interest by contract at 5 per cent., but to mitigate the severity of that contract in the event of the money being paid by a certain day. It is not a penalty on non-payment (though it seems a fine distinction) when you say that your contract shall be made for interest at 5 per cent., to be reduced, in the event of your punctual payment, to 4 per cent.; but it is a relaxation of the terms of that original contract, not taking it by way of penalty at all, but a relaxation of your contract which you would merit and purchase by paying at a definite and fixed time. If that definite and fixed time were exceeded, then the original contract revived in all its force. Sometimes mortgage deeds being somewhat unskilfully drawn, interest at 4 per cent. was reserved by the contract to be raised to 5 per cent. if there was non-payment at a particular day; and although that brings the case to an extremely fine and nice distinction, it all the better illustrates the rule which has been applied at all times by the Courts, with reference to this question of penalty. If there had been indulgence at any time upon given terms, as long as those terms are observed, the indulgence lasts. When those terms are departed from the indulgence at once fails, and the original contract is revived in full force." The question appears to have been considered in two cases in this country.

In the case of Kirti Chunder Chatterjee v. J. J. Atkinson (15) a sum of money was borrowed at a certain rate of interest. Subsequently on a settlement of account between the parties it was agreed that a lower rate of interest would be chargeable on the amount remaining due, if paid within a certain date, but if not so paid the higher rate originally contracted for would be payable, and it was held that the stipulation for the payment of interest at the higher rate cannot be regarded as a penalty, that being the rate contracted for. Maclean, C. J., observed:—"Then it is said that this provision as to a higher rate of interest by reason of default of payment on the 31st March, was a penalty within section 74 of the Contract Act. I should have been glad if I could have taken that view; but the authorities are against it. Here the higher rate of interest was only that originally payable under the bond: and the new bargain under the endorsement was merely a concession to the defendant, of which he failed to take advantage. This is not the case of a lower rate of interest being mentioned in the bond, with a provision that, if the debt be not paid, a higher rate shall prevail as from the date of the loan. Here the higher rate was originally contracted for; it cannot then be regarded as a penalty."

In the case of Kutub ud-din Ahmad v. Bashir ud-din (16), Stanley, C. J., after stating "that according to the English authorities it is well settled that if a mortgagee stipulate for a higher rate of interest in default of punctual payment he must reserve the higher rate as the interest payable under the mortgage and provide for its reduction in case of punctual payment, and if he do so he will be entitled to recover the higher rate, but that he cannot effect his object by reserving the lower rate and then fixing a higher rate in case of non-payment of the lower rate at the appointed time, such an agreement being considered in equity as in the nature of a penalty", observed "this rule is not altogether intelligible". He referred to the observation of Jessel, M. R., in Wallis v. Smith (11), quoted above, but he was of opinion that an agreement on the part of a mortgagee to accept on punctual payment interest at a lower rate than the rate agreed to be paid was free from objection, and accordingly upheld the decree of the Court below which awarded the higher rate of interest. Banerji, J., was inclined to hold at the hearing of the appeal that the provision as to interest was an attempt to circumvent the rule of law as to penalties but in the face of English authorities and in the absence of authority in this country to the contrary, agreed with Stanley, C. J.

(14) (1880) 5 A. C. 685; 50 L. J. Q. B. 49; 43 L. T. 258; 29 W. R. 81.

(15) 10 C. W. N. 640.

(16) 5 Ind. Cas. 635; 7 A. L. J. 394; 32 A. 448.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

If the question were res integra, we would have been prepared to hold that there should be no distinction in principle between a stipulation to pay a certain rate of interest to be reduced to a lower rate on punctual payment, and a stipulation to pay a certain rate of interest to be raised to a higher rate in the event of non-payment of the interest punctually: the object being to ensure punctual payment, and not to settle the damages, it would be a penalty whatever might be the form in which the agreement is expressed. But it appears from the cases cited above that in England, it is settled law that where there is a contract to pay a higher rate of interest to be reduced to a lower rate on punctual payment, the stipulation to pay the higher rate is not a penalty. In the case of Union Bank of London v. Ingram (13) Jessel, M. R., allowed the higher rate of interest on default of punctual payment, though the learned Judge himself in the subsequent case observed that "anything more irrational than the doctrine can hardly be stated. It entirely depended on form and not on substance." In Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14) also Lord Hatherley, although referring to the distinction as an "extremely fine and nice distinction", held the stipulation to pay at the reduced rate in the event of punctual payment to be a relaxation of the original contract to pay at a higher rate, "not taking it by way of penalty at all, but a relaxation of the contract which the debtor would merit and purchase by paying at a definite and fixed time." The two Indian cases cited above appear to have followed the rule of English Law, and Maclean, C. J., held in the case reported as Kirti Chunder Chatterjee v. J. J. Atkinson (15), that the stipulation to pay the higher rate was the original contract, and, therefore, was not a penalty.

Now the question is, what was the real contract in the present case. Clause 1 (3) of the mortgage deed no doubt stipulated for the payment of interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to be reduced to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on punctual payment, but the scheme for liquidation of the mortgage debt which is a material part of the deed shows that interest was calculated at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. only. In construing a document effect should be given to all parts of it. Now taking clause 1 (3) together with the scheme, it appears that the intention of the parties was that interest should be paid at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and on default at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; otherwise we would have expected the calculation of interest in the scheme at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., if that was the 'original contract.' It is true that interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was paid in the years in which there was default in punctual payment, but that by itself would not affect the rights of the parties under the contract, if the payments were made under a mistake as to their rights under the contract, and the payments made by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall can be of very little value, if any, on the question of intention of the mortgagors themselves.

Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act does away with the distinction between penalty and liquidated damages and under the section as amended by Act VI of 1899, the Court has the power to grant relief if the contract contains any stipulation by way of penalty. It is true the contract in the present case was entered into before the amendment, but the amendment does not appear to have made any real change in the law, the only difference being that if the stipulation is penal, relief can now be granted under the provisions of the section and it is not necessary for Courts to resort to their equitable jurisdiction in order to grant relief.

The mortgagees, however, are entitled to reasonable compensation for non-payment of interest punctually. But 2 per cent. does not represent the damages which the creditor suffered for non-payment of the interest on the date fixed. The reasonable compensation to which he is entitled would be the interest on $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest in respect of payments not punctually made. We accordingly hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest upon interest at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from the date of the bond up to the date which may be fixed for payment.

The last question is whether Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagor or the mortgagees and whether it is competent to a mortgagee in this country to nominate and appoint an agent to manage the mortgaged properties and at the same time relieve himself from the liability to which a mortgagee is subject when he enters into possession of the mortgaged properties.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

We have, therefore, to see whether or not under the terms of the mortgage, Messrs. Garth & Weatherall became agents of the mortgagor or the mortgagees. If they were the agents of the mortgagees, the latter would be bound to account as mortgagees in possession and must bear the loss, if any, caused by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall as if they had actually entered into possession.

Mortgage deeds in the English form generally contain an appointment of, or a power for the mortgagee to appoint a person to be Receiver of the mortgaged premises, by means of which mortgagees are able to obtain the benefit of possession without its disadvantages.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this practice should not be recognized in this country. It is further contended that having regard to the provisions of the mortgage deed even in England the Receiver would be treated as agent of the mortgagee. Lastly, it is contended that whatever the English Law may be on the subject, having regard to the deed of mortgage in this case, the mortgagees cannot be heard to say that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were not their agents.

The manner in which mortgagees in England acquired the power of appointing a person to be the Receiver of the mortgaged premises was traced by Lord Justice Rigby in the case of Gaskell v. Gosling (17). The learned Judge pointed out that having regard to the exceptional severity with which a mortgagee in possession was treated in a suit for redemption and made to account, the Court favoured any means which would enable the mortgagee to obtain the advantages of possession without its drawbacks, and observed: "Mortgagees began to insist upon the appointment by the mortgagor of a Receiver to receive the income, keep down the interest on incumbrances, and hold the surplus, if any, for the mortgagor, and to stipulate often that the Receiver should have extensive powers of management. Presently mortgagees stipulated that they themselves should in place of the mortgagor appoint the Receiver to act as the mortgagor's agent. This made no difference in the Receiver's position, and imposed no liability on the mortgagee appointing. Though it was the mortgagee who in fact appointed the Receiver, yet in making the appointment the mortgagee acted, and it was the object of the parties that he should act, as the agent for the mortgagor. Lord Cranworth in Jefferys v. Dickson (18) stated the doctrine of the Courts of Equity on the subject to the effect following. The mortgagee, as agent of the mortgagor, appointed a person to receive the income, with directions to keep down the interest of the mortgage, and to account for the surplus to the mortgagor as his principal. These directions were supposed to emanate, not from the mortgagee, but from the mortgagor; and the Receiver, therefore, in the relation between himself and the mortgagor, stood in the position of a person appointed by an instrument to which the mortgagee was no party. Lord Cranworth in the case referred to was speaking of a mortgage of lands; but the same doctrine applies to all kinds of property, being founded, as it is, not upon any considerations peculiar to the law of real property, but upon the contract between the debtor who gives and the creditor who takes the security. Of course the mortgagor cannot of his own will revoke the appointment of a Receiver, or that appointment would be useless."

The grounds urged on behalf of the appellant in support of the contention that the practice should not be followed in this country are as follows:—In England a landowner has always an attorney at his elbow, and can take care of himself, whereas in this country mortgagors generally are helpless. The power of sale which the mortgagee possesses in England is recognized in this country only in a limited form under section 69 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the proviso to that section shows that a Receiver in this country except in exceptional cases is an agent of the person appointing him. The law on the subject in England is due to the practice of English conveyancers adopted to get rid of the responsibility of mortgagees and the practice itself is not very old. Section 69 of the Transfer of Property Act goes to negative the existence of such a practice in this country. In America there is conflict of authority on the question whether a mortgagee who nominates and procures the appointment of a Receiver is responsible for his default. See Jones on Mortgage, 6th Edition, section 1537A. Even in England in 1811, in the case of Hutchinson v. Masareene (19), the trustees were treated as the agents of the mortgagees and the losses caused by the trustees were held to fall upon the creditor. That appears to have been the law in England before the practice, to which Rigby, L. J., refers, had grown up.

(17) (1896) 1 Q. B. 669; 65 L. J. Q. B. 435.

(18) (1866) 1 Ch. 183 at p. 190; 35 L. J. Ch. 376; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 281; 14 L. T. 208; 14 W. R. 322.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

There is a good deal of force in these arguments. A private Receiver deriving his power from the appointment of a mortgagee is almost unknown to Indian people. (See Woodroffe on Receivers, 2nd Edition, page 167.) No case in which a private Receiver, deriving his power from the appointment of a mortgagee, has come up to the Courts of this country and the question is one of considerable importance and requires careful consideration. We think, however, that it will be unnecessary to decide this question in the present case, if as contended on behalf of the respondent, Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were appointed by the mortgagor and were agents of the mortgagor and acted as such.

In support of the contention that under circumstances similar to those of the present case the Receiver is treated as an agent of the mortgagee even in England, reliance is placed on the cases Vimbos Ltd., In re (20), Robinson Printing Co. v. Chic Ltd. (21) and Deys v. Wood (22). In these cases the appointment of the Receiver was made by the mortgagees and in the deed of mortgage.

In the first case powers were given to the Receiver to enter into compromise in the interests of the mortgagees and to sell the mortgaged property or concur in selling it. There was nothing said about the Receiver keeping down the interest, there was no direction to him to pay any surplus over to the mortgagor, and nothing was said about the Receiver being the agent of the mortgagor. It was under these circumstances that Cozens Hardy, J., observed: "It is remarkable that that power differs in almost every material respect from the ordinary power which is given to mortgagees. There is nothing to say that the Receiver is to be the agent of the mortgagor, who is solely to be responsible for his acts and defaults, as in the Conveyancing Act. There is nothing whatever to say what he is to do with moneys which he receives. There is no direction to him to keep down the interest on the mortgage, or pay any arrears or surplus over to the mortgagor. There are none of those provisions one finds in an ordinary receivership deed, and it does seem to me that the Receiver in these circumstances was the agent of the persons who appointed him, not the agent of the mortgagor; and it follows from that, of course, that the debenture holders themselves would be answerable for all the faults and omissions of the Receiver."

In the second case debentures gave power to the holders to appoint a Receiver to take possession of the assets, carry on the business, sell the property, make any arrangements he should think expedient in the interest of the debenture holders and apply in a specified way the moneys received, but they did not provide that the Receiver was to be the agent of the mortgagors.

Warrington, J., observed that there is no general rule of law as to the position of the Receiver and referring to the observation of Cranworth, L. C., in Jefferys v. Dickson (18), said: "The Lord Chancellor is there dealing with a Receiver appointed under the ordinary power, that is to say, either by the mortgagor himself in pursuance of provisions in the mortgage deed or by the mortgagee under similar provisions, or under the Act then subsisting—namely, Lord Cranworth's Act. In all these cases there was an express provision that the Receiver should be the agent of the mortgagor. See the remarks of Rigby, L. J., in Gaskell v. Gosling (17)" and held following Vimbos Limited, In re (20) that the Receiver was not the agent of the mortgagor.

In the third case also there was no provision that the Receiver shall be the agent of the mortgagor. He was to have power not only to take possession of the property and (19) (1811) 2 Ball. & Beaty. 49.

(20) (1900) 1 Ch. 470; 69 L. J. Ch. 209; 82 L. T. 597; 48 W. R. 520; 8 Manson 101.

(21) (1905) 2 Ch. 123; 74 L. J. Ch. 399; 93 L. T. 262; 53 W. R. 681; 12 Manson 314; 21 T. L. R. 446.

(22) (1911) 1 K. B. 806; 80 L. J. K. B. 553; 104 L. T. 404; 18 Manson 229.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

to carry on the business, but he was to sell the property comprised in the debentures. He might make any arrangements in the interest of the debenture holders and finally any moneys in his hands were to be applied in satisfaction of the debentures. Scrutton, J., observed, "If he exercises his power to sell, it must be by virtue of and for the purpose of realizing the charge created by the debentures; the business is carried on for the sole benefit, so far as the provisions of the document are concerned, of the debenture holders, and in my opinion, having regard to all the points I have mentioned, he is their agent." As pointed out by Farwell, L. J., (in the course of argument in the Court of Appeal), it was not like an ordinary receivership deed which provides for the payment of any surplus, beyond what is necessary to satisfy what is due to the mortgagee, to those who may be entitled to it; the proceeds of any assets were apparently payable under it to the debenture holders only. At page 821, Vaughan Williams, J., observed that the object of the appointment of the Receiver was really the sale and realization of the security to the satisfaction of the debenture debts, and the provisions went to show that it was intended that the Receiver should be Receiver on behalf of the mortgagees and not on behalf of the mortgagors.

The present case is distinguishable from the above three cases on the following grounds:—

(1). The managers, though nominated by the mortgagees, were not appointed by them.

(2). The mortgagees were not parties to the deed of appointment, and the managers were no parties to the deed of mortgage.

(3). There was a direction to the managers to keep down the interest and to apply the income as laid down in the deed of mortgage.

(4). There was a destination as to the surplus (if any) of the income, (a) in the case of Priyomoyee (after payment of Rs. 2,400 to her) to the managers themselves as part of their remuneration over and above the 15 per cent., and (b) in the case of Mohini Mohan one half to the managers and the other half to the mortgagor himself; and no portion of the surplus was to go to the mortgagees in either case.

It may be pointed out here that in Hutchinson v. Lord Maserene (19) cited before us, the trustees were appointed by the creditors who had obtained the power of appointment from Lord Maserene; the latter did not appoint the trustees nor had he any power to remove them and it was accordingly held that the loss occasioned by the default of the trustees should fall upon the creditors who appointed them. In Gaskell v. Gosling (17) also it appears that it was the trustees of the debenture holders who appointed the Receiver and had the power to remove him without notice to the mortgagors, although the Receiver under the terms of the agreement was to be the agent of the mortgagors who were to be liable for his acts and defaults.

We have next to see whether under the deed of mortgage Messrs. Garth & Weatherall became the agents of the mortgagees or of the mortgagor.

Now, paragraph IV of the mortgage deed contemplates possession by the mortgagor, "until the mortgagees shall enter into and take possession of the mortgaged premises." Paragraph VI (2) provides for payment of the Government revenue and other charges by the mortgagor, and the production of the receipts of payment by the mortgagor to the mortgagees, and paragraph VII deals with the management of the property and sets forth the provisions relating to management "until the mortgagees shall enter into and take possession of the mortgaged premises." We will deal with these provisions later on. But in the first place, Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were to manage the mortgaged premises (without any interference by the mortgagor) so long as they fulfilled the terms and conditions, and in the event of their death, resignation or dismissal of either of them, by the survivor of them, or failing such survivor by another qualified manager who would be nominated by the mortgagees provided that any manager subsequently so appointed by the mortgagees shall, if required by the mortgagor, give security for the proper performance of his duty and management. It thus appears that the first managers (Messrs. Garth & Weatherall), though nominated by the mortgagees, were appointed by the mortgagor. Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were no parties to the mortgage deed, the indenture being between the mortgagor and the Company (the mortgagees)

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

The mortgagees again were no parties to the deed of appointment which was between the mortgagor and Messrs. Garth & Weatherall.

We were referred on behalf of the appellant to Key and Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing, 10th Edition, Vol. II, page 81, where the specimen form shows that the appointment is made by the mortgagor with the concurrence of the mortgagee as indicating that the mortgagees are no parties to it, and there is a proviso (see page 84) that the Receiver shall be deemed to be in all respects the agent of the mortgagor, and that the mortgagee shall not under any circumstances be answerable for any loss or misapplication or default, etc., of the Receiver. But the passage at page 83 (bottom), "and the Receiver covenants with the mortgagee and also as a separate covenant with the borrower," and the passage at page 85, "In consonance with the premises the borrower with the concurrence of the mortgagee hereby appoints the Receiver," show that the mortgagee is also a party to the appointment.

The form given in Davidson's Precedents and Forms at page 1016 shows that the mortgagor, the mortgagee and the Receiver are all parties to the deed of mortgage. That form is one in which the Receiver is appointed by the mortgage deed itself, and the Receiver is, therefore, a party to it. There are other forms in which the Receiver is appointed by a separate deed, which is more convenient. A form where the appointment is made by a separate deed contemporaneously with the deed of mortgage is given at page 287 of Key and Elphinstone, and that shows that the parties are (1) the mortgagor, (2) the mortgagee, and (3) the Receiver. See also Prideaux's Precedents, Volume I, page 781, where the appointment is made by the mortgage deed itself and page 1045 where the appointment is made by a separate deed; Wood and Jarman's Conveyancing, Volume II, pages 158-159; Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Volume IX, page 210 (see page 912, clause 4).

It appears, therefore, from all the forms that the mortgagee and the Receiver are parties to the deed of mortgage and to the deed of appointment, and the reason why it is stated that the Receiver "is to be deemed the agent of the mortgagee" appears to be that the mortgagee being a party to the deed, a question may arise that he is the agent of the mortgagee.

In the present case, however, such a question does not arise. As already stated Messrs. Garth & Weatherall are no parties to the mortgage deed, nor are the mortgagees parties to the deed of appointment.

Paragraph VII, clause (2), of the deed of mortgage lays down the powers of management conferred upon the managers more fully detailed in the deed of management, which will be presently referred to. The main provisions in the deed, which are relied upon on behalf of the appellant as showing that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagor, are as follows:—

(1) That the managers shall not be liable to dismissal except for misconduct or neglect of duty or of the terms of the deed proved to the satisfaction of the mortgagees.

(2) The managers shall at all times render to the mortgagees all such information and accounts as shall be called for, and specially for the purpose of any audit or scrutiny which the mortgagees may think necessary at any time.

(3) For the purpose of satisfying and informing themselves as to the management of the mortgaged premises or as to the circumstances thereof or for the purpose of any audit or scrutiny, the mortgagees may from time to time and at any time call for and require to have furnished to them by the managers for the time being a statement of the then existing rent roll of the mortgaged premises and the production of all documents required to verify the same.

The provisions relating to the appointment by the mortgagees of a manager in the event of the mortgagor failing to execute powers of attorney or other deeds which might be necessary to enable the manager for the time being to carry on the management, and those relating to the appointment of a Receiver will be dealt with later on.

The first provision referred to above is that the mortgagor shall have no power of dismissal except for misconduct or default proved to the satisfaction of the mortgagees. It does not appear reasonable that the manager should be nominated by the mortgagees and the mortgagor will have no power to dismiss him without the concurrence of the mortgagees, even if he is guilty of misconduct. But apparently the plaintiffs, an English Company, did not agree to advance the loan, except upon the conditions that the mortgaged property would be managed by persons in whom they had confidence. It was not only Priyomoyee, but Mohini Mohan also agreed to have the loan on that condition, which is expressly stated in the deeds. It is true, as observed by Lord Macnaghten in Samuel v. Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation Ltd. (23), "Necessitous men are not truly free men", and that observation applies with much greater force in this country but at the same time the mortgagees had to safeguard their interest and to see that the estate was managed by persons whom they trusted, in order to ensure the payment of the interest and the principal according to the sliding scale as provided in the bond. If under these circumstances the mortgagees made it a condition that the estate must be managed by particular persons and the mortgagors agreed to it and acted upon it for about 18 years, it cannot now be urged that the managers must be treated as agents of the mortgagees on the ground that the contract was an unreasonable one. Besides although the managers could not be dismissed even for misconduct without the concurrence of the mortgagees, it does not follow that the mortgagees could arbitrarily refuse to be satisfied even if there was misconduct on the part of the managers. The mortgagor was not given an absolute power of dismissal, but a power reserved to the mortgagor to dismiss the manager at the will of the mortgagor would defeat the very object of the provisions. If the mortgagor had such a power, the manager could be dismissed the very next day. The object being to secure regular payment of the interest and principal as provided in the scheme, the parties agreed to have the estate managed by persons in whom the mortgagees had confidence without interference by the mortgagor, and it was necessary, therefore, to restrict the power of the mortgagor to dismiss the managers unless the mortgagees were satisfied of such misconduct, and, therefore, with their concurrence. But because their appointment was irrevocable except as provided for in the deed it does not follow that they ceased to be the agents of the mortgagor: and it is to be observed that the mortgagees had no power of dismissing Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, except as provided in clause 6 and in paragraph VIII, which relates to the appointment of a Receiver and which will be dealt with later on.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

(23) (1904) A. C. 323 at p. 327; 73 L. J. Ch. 526; 52 W. R. 673; 90 L. T. 731; 20 T. L. R. 536; 11 Manson 276.

Under the 2nd and 3rd provisions referred to above, Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were bound to render such information and accounts as might be called for by the mortgagees for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to the management or for audit or scrutiny which they may think necessary and to submit statements of rent roll of the estate and documents for verifying the same, if so required by the mortgagees. This, however, appears only for the information of the Company as to how the mortgage estate was being managed and for scrutiny if the Company required the account. It does not appear that the managers were to account to the mortgagees in the same manner as an agent is liable to render accounts to his principal and which Messrs. Garth & Weatherall covenanted to render to Priyomoyee, as appears from the deed of appointment. The mortgagees in order to protect their interests were interested in seeing that the revenue and other charges were regularly paid, and the rents and profits duly applied in payment of the principal and interest as laid down in the mortgage deed, and in order to satisfy themselves of the same they reserved the power of calling for information and accounts and for auditing the same if thought necessary by them. We do not think it was intended to reserve to the Company any direct control over or power of interfering with the management of estate, but the provisions appear to have been made for the protection of their interest and only as a check to prevent any mismanagement or misapplication by the managers. The mortgagees could not sue Messrs. Garth & Weatherall if the latter refused to account to the former, except through the mortgagor.

On the other hand, the deed of management to which the mortgagees were no parties shows that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were appointed managers by

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Priyomoyee. It recites that it was one of the conditions on which the Company agreed to advance the loan that she should appoint Messrs. Garth & Weatherall as managers of the estate, which was to be managed entirely by them without any interference by her. Those persons were accordingly appointed her managers, attorneys and agents to collect the rents and profits in her name, and the powers of management set forth in the deed were to be exercised in her name and for her benefit but without any interference by her. They were to get a commission of 15 per cent. on the gross collections, which was to cover all charges of management and collections including costs of litigations for realizing rents. They were to keep down interest, pay Rs. 12,600 a year to the mortgagees as provided in the mortgage deed, and Rs. 2,400 a year to the mortgagor (Priyomoyee) and they were to get the balance of the income, if any, as their remuneration in addition to the 15 per cent.

The deed further provided that the managers were faithfully to account to Priyomoyee, keep books of account which shall be open to her inspection, and once every year, if so required, furnish to her a clear statement of the income and expenditure of the estate, but that they were not to be dismissed or removed from the office of manager except with the written consent of the mortgagees.

It will be seen, therefore, that it was Priyomoyee who appointed Messrs. Garth & Weatherall though they were nominated by the mortgagees, and they were to act as her agents and exercise all the powers of management in her name. They were to keep books of account open to her inspection and faithfully to account to her. There was no such covenant with the mortgagees. That being so, the mere fact that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were, under the terms of the mortgage deed, liable to submit to the mortgagees all such information and accounts as might be called for by them for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to the proper management of the mortgaged premises or for the purposes of auditing and scrutiny, if thought necessary by them, did not constitute them agents of the mortgagees. As already stated, the mortgagees had no power of dismissing Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, and all that the mortgagees were entitled to get was Rs. 12,600 a year as provided in the mortgage deed, and the balance of the profits, if any were to go to Messrs. Garth & Weatherall as part of their remuneration and, therefore, as agents of the mortgagor. In the case of Mohini Mohan, half of the surplus profits were to go to him, and the other half to the managers. The mortgagees were not to get anything over and above Rs. 12,600 a year. Having regard to all the provisions of the deed of mortgage and management we think that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagors.

There was no provision in the deed of mortgage that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were to account to Priyomoyee and that is because they were no parties to it. It was necessary, however, to provide in the deed of mortgage that the managers would be liable to submit information and accounts to the mortgagees if required by them, because the latter, in the absence of any authority from the mortgagor, would have no power to call for the same from the managers, and they (the mortgagees) were no parties to the deed of appointment.

It is pointed out that it is not expressly stated in the mortgage deed that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were to be the agents of the mortgagor, but such a statement is necessary where, as in the English cases cited before us, both the mortgagee and the Receiver are parties to the deed. Here Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were appointed by Priyomoyee alone by a separate deed of appointment to which the mortgagees were no parties, and all the provisions of the deed show that they were to be agents of hers only. It was unnecessary under these circumstances to make an express statement that they were to be the agents of the mortgagor.

Paragraph VIII of the mortgage deed provided that if the manager for the time being failed to apply any part of the rents and profits as provided in the deed, then the mortgagees would be able to appoint any person, upon such salary and remuneration and with such powers of management as they shall think fit to be Receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises and the mortgagees would, at their absolute discretion, be able from time to time to suspend, remove or dismiss any Receiver in his place, and that the mortgagees shall not incur any personal liability in respect of or be personally answerable for any loss or misapplication of the rents or profits of the mortgaged premises or any part thereof by reason of any default, neglect or misappropriation of any manager or Receiver. It was further provided that "any Receiver appointed as aforesaid shall be forthwith discharged by the mortgagees, and the mortgaged premises shall be again managed as hereinbefore provided by a manager upon the mortgagor making good the deficiency or default in consequence of which the Receiver was appointed, and upon the mortgagor paying all the expenses incurred in connection with the appointment and during the employment of the Receiver." This clause makes clear the distinction between a Receiver who could be appointed and dismissed by the mortgagees (though the latter would not be liable for his default or misapplication) and a manager who was to be appointed by the mortgagor and into whose management the estate was to revert on the mortgagors making good the deficiency which led to the appointment of the Receiver by the mortgagees. Clause 6 of paragraph VII provided for the dismissal of the manager by the mortgagee, if the mortgagor failed to execute powers of attorney or other deeds in order to enable the managers to properly carry on the management. It will be seen that clause VIII related to the appointment of a Receiver by the mortgagees only in certain events, and only then they could exercise the absolute powers given to them. So long as they fulfilled the conditions, Messrs. Garth & Weatherall could not be removed by the mortgagees.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA V. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

The mortgagees, however, never appointed a Receiver, and the provisions relating to the power of the mortgagees to appoint a Receiver never came into operation, nor did the contingency contemplated in clause 6 of paragraph VII ever arise. If they had, the questions raised on behalf of the appellant, viz., whether in such a case the Receiver should be treated as agent of the mortgagor or the mortgagees and whether the English Law on the point should be followed in this country, would have required consideration. As it is, so far as Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were concerned, we think that they were agents of the mortgagor. It will be observed that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were to get 15 per cent. on the gross collection as their commission and the remainder of the income (after payment of the amounts specified in the deed of management) by way of remuneration in addition to the said 15 per cent., whereas in England the Receiver's commission does not exceed 5 per cent. under the Statute, but the mortgagees were to get nothing beyond their principal and interest. It also appears that in some respects the powers given to Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were more extensive than those which a Receiver has in England. It may have been imprudent to appoint them on such terms and with such powers, but that cannot affect the construction of the deeds nor make them agents of the mortgagor.

The evidence shows that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were treated and acted as agents of the mortgagors. After the death of Mohini Mohan, Sham Peary made an application for Letters of Administration. Thereupon Messrs. Garth & Weatherall made a petition to the District Judge of Dacca on the 13th January 1897 (see Exhibit B), in which they stated that accounts had been rendered from time to time to Mohini Mohan up to the end of 1301, that Mohini Mohan had been in the habit of taking advances from them and that he had overdrawn Rs. 12,844. On account of such advances, and for the reasons stated in the petition they prayed that a Receiver or Administrator might be appointed of the moveables and also immoveable properties other than those under the management, as the estate was likely to suffer loss and damage if left in the hands of Sham Peary, his heiress. A similar application was made by the Bank of Bengal (Dacca Branch) as a creditor of the deceased for the appointment of a Receiver. It appears from the order of the District Judge, dated the 29th January 1897, passed upon that petition that Sham Peary in showing cause stated that no adjustment of accounts since the year 1301 had been made with the managers. So the adjustment of accounts up to that year was admitted. The District Judge appointed the Nazir of his Court as Administrator. The order sheet (Order No. 7, dated the 16th February 1897) shows that accounts were filed by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, and the Administrator was directed to examine them. All this goes to show that at that time both Sham Peary and Garth & Weatherall proceeded on the footing that the latter were accountable to the mortgagor. If they were the agents of the mortgagees, the mortgagor or his Administrator could not call upon them to account, and the Court could not order such accounts except in a suit for redemption.

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Then in the deed of endowment, dated the 14th December 1902, Priyomoyee distinctly stated that she had placed the management of the properties in the hands of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. This deed was, as we have seen, attested among others by Debendra Nath Das, Pleader, and Kunja Behary Das, who managed her affairs, and there is no suggestion that she did not understand this document.

Then again in the subsequent deed of endowment, dated the 10th February 1898, (which was consented to by the then sole reversioner Khetra Mohan) she made a similar statement. Admittedly her allowance of Rs. 2,400 a year was stopped from the year 1898, and if these gentlemen were the agents of the mortgagees, Priyomoyee would certainly have complained to the Company that her allowance had been stopped or that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were mismanaging the properties. This shows how the arrangement was understood by the parties. Lastly, in the release executed by Sham Peary herself on the 26th November 1908 in favour of Mr. Weatherall, it is stated, "after looking into and examining the accounts which you have up to this day submitted to me and to my predecessors and upon taking into consideration the effect thereof, upon receipt of the cash tahbil of this day according to the jamakharach submitted by you and with the advice of well-wishers and persons having knowledge of law I execute in your favour this deed of release in respect of all acts done by you and Mr. Garth, and after his death by you alone." This unmistakably shows that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall acted as the agents of the mortgagor. The accounts were admittedly submitted up to 1901, and the release by Sham Peary is only consistent with their being the agents of the mortgagor. If they were not the agents of the mortgagor Sham Peary would not have given a release to Mr. Weatherall.

It is contended in this Court that no importance should be attached to the deed of release executed by Sham Peary, an old lady in her dotage. But in her written statement she did not attack the said deed nor plead that it was not binding upon her, and no issue was raised as to the validity thereof. It appears from the evidence that her servant Radha Bullav Das attested the deed. This Radha Bullav signed her name in the written statement and looked after this litigation on her behalf, and was actually present in Court at the trial and he was not examined. Under these circumstances we are unable to discard the deed of release as being of no value.

The deed of release was to be kept in the custody of the Bank of Bengal and was not to operate until a trust deed executed by Mr. Weatherall was to reach the hands of Mr. Lockhart, who was appointed manager in his place. In the agreement executed by Sham Peary in favour of Mr. Lockhart on the same day it was stated, "I am entitled to take away from him (Mr. Weatherall) the management and possession of the properties", and that Mr. Weatherall had resigned according to her wishes, and the provisions of that agreement show that Mr. Lockhart became her agent. Mr. Lockhart, it appears, was appointed on new terms by Sham Peary, and he managed the estate as her am-mukhtear, paid moneys to the Company from 1908 to 1910, as shown in the statements annexed to the plaint. The defendant in her written statement (paragraph 22) stated that Mr. Lockhart had been appointed manager by the plaintiff Company without her knowledge and consent, and that he remained as their agent until May 1910 that he had committed various acts of mismanagement and misappropriated large sums of money, and that the plaintiffs, in order to avoid their responsibility to the defendant, had caused a suit for accounts to be instituted against Mr. Lockhart in the name of Mr. Weatherall by suppression of material facts. Mr. Weatherall, it is true, promised to execute a power of attorney in favour of Mr,

SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

Lockhart, who had been nominated a trustee by Sham Peary and the Company in the interval pending the execution of the deed of trust by Mr. Weatherall in his favour. Mr. Weatherall did not execute the deed of trust, and the order sheet dated the 30th January 1913 shows that Mr. Weatherall instituted a suit against Mr. Lockhart. But the fact remains that Sham Peary did execute a release in favour of Mr. Weatherall and which can only be upon the footing that he was the agent of the mortgagor, and the defendant has not attempted to substantiate the allegation that Mr. Lockhart was appointed manager by the plaintiff Company without her knowledge or consent.

We do not see how Sham Peary after herself having made the statements which she did in the release referred to above, and given a release to Mr. Weatherall, can say that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagees, or hold the Company liable for their misconduct, if any.

Lastly in the letter, dated the 19th September 1909, (Exhibit XL) written by Sham Peary to Messrs. Gillander Arbuthnot & Co. (the agents of the mortgagees) there is not a word of complaint against the Company or about any mismanagement by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. The letter was drafted by the Pleader Gagan Chandra Ghose, who says that he explained it to Sham Peary and the letter bears an endorsement to that effect. This gentleman states that he used to write letters, give legal advice and watch whether any property of the estate was going to be ruined on account of the bad management of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, and he used to get a retainer of Rs. 25 per month from Sham Peary for such services. He, however, says that he never asked Messrs. Garth & Weatherall about their management of the estate nor thought it his duty to ask them anything bearing on the management of the estate. He admits that he saw tabular statements (gross collections, Government revenue, cesses, landlord's rents, establishment charges, net income, amount to be paid for interest formed the principal headings or columns of such tabular statements) submitted by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall at the place of Sham Peary, that every year such tabular statements used to be submitted to Sham Peary, and that in the columns of interest and principal the amounts due to the Company were mentioned. He says that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall used to send similar statements to the plaintiff Company, but he did not see any statement being sent, he only saw such statements ready to be sent. He further says that every year auditors from the plaintiff Company used to come to Dacca to check the management account kept by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, and gives the name of one of the auditors as Kamikhya Nath Sen. This Kamikhya Nath was the accountant of Messrs. Gillanders and he says that the Company were never in possession and never interfered with the management thereof by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. He admits that he went to Dacca on several occasions and states the business for which he went there. He was not cross-examined as to whether he had at any time audited the accounts of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. He was examined on commission in March 1914, while Gagan Chandra Ghose was examined in April 1914. Kali Dyal Ghose, who was the head clerk of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall, says that no member of Gillanders' firm ever came to the firm of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall to make any enquiry about the income and expenditure of the mortgaged estate, and does not remember if any accounts were submitted to them. He says that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall had a power of attorney from the plaintiff Company to look after their interest, but that was three years after the execution of the mortgage deeds. One Jonmeyjoy Dutt, who was in the service of Messrs. Garth & Weatherall as the peshkar of their zemindari office, was examined by the plaintiffs and he says that he does not know if they sent any account to the Company. Mr. Grazebrook of the firm of Messrs. Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co. has deposed that the plaintiff Company had nothing to do with the annual collection or expenditure or the management of the mortgaged properties, that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were not their agents and no statements were called for by the Company from them.

It appears, therefore, that there is conflict of testimony upon the question whether tabular statements were sent by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall. But even assuming that they did submit tabular statements to the Company, that fact by itself would not constitute them agents of the Company, as the latter were entitled under the terms of the mortgage to get information and accounts from the manager for satisfying themselves as to the management of the mortgaged premises. It is contended that the mortgagees ought to have removed Messrs. Garth & Weatherall when they defaulted in paying the principal and interest as provided in the scheme. But we do not know the reasons why they defaulted, and although the mortgagees had the power under clause VIII, they were not bound to exercise that power. On the other hand if Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the mortgagees, it is remarkable that the mortgagor did not complain to the Company about such default although yearly statements were submitted by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall to the mortgagor, and although the allowance payable to Priyomoyee herself had been stopped. We have seen that Priyomoyee in the deeds of endowment stated that "unfortunately on account of various adverse circumstances intervening in the management of the properties," her allowance had been stopped since 1898.

SYAM PEARY PASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

The plaintiffs have produced a large number of decrees to show that rent suits were instituted by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall in the name of the mortgagors and copies of mutation proceedings to show that they got themselves registered as managers for the mortgagors under the Land Registration Act and subsequently as trustees. If Messrs. Garth & Weatherall were the agents of the plaintiff Company, the mortgagors would have complained of their mismanagement to the Company; and it is remarkable that throughout the long period from the date of mortgage to the date of the suit there was not a word of complaint to the Company by Priyomoyee, Mohini Mohan, or even by Sham Peary after their death.

It is to be observed that there is no evidence that Messrs. Garth & Weatherall actually mismanaged the estate, or were guilty of misconduct or neglect of duty. It is contended that they must have satisfied themselves before they took over the management that the income was sufficient to meet the payment of Rs. 12,600 a year to the mortgagees and Rs. 2,400 a year to Priyomoyee, besides the 15 per cent. commission for themselves, and even a balance of profits was anticipated, the whole of which was to go to them in the case of Priyomoyee and a moiety of which was to be received by them in the case of Mohini Mohan and that the facts that the payments were made for the first few years as stipulated in the deeds and then became less show that there was at any rate mismanagement by them in subsequent years.

But there was no evidence as to why the payments became less in subsequent years. Debendra Nath Das who managed the 4-annas share of Gobindarani (widow of Radhika Mohan) says that the net income of the share was between Rs. 12,000 and Rs. 13,000. He, however, managed that share without any remuneration. Then he says that during two years the realization was less on account of a litigation for a chur. We have seen what Priyomoyee herself said in the deed of endowment on the point although her own allowance had been stopped, and having regard to the fact that accounts had admittedly been submitted to Mohini Mohan until 1301, it is very unlikely that the mortgagors would not have complained at any time if there was misappropriation or mismanagement by Messrs. Garth & Weatherall.

If they were the agents of the mortgagors, the Company would not be responsible even if there was any mismanagement by them but the absence of any complaint on the part of the mortgagor during such a long period has a bearing on the question whether Messrs. Garth & Weatherall acted as agents of the mortgagor.

There remains only one other point raised in this Court.

Moti Lall Das (the son of Khetra Mohan), who is the reversionary heir, is the defendant No. 2 in the suit, and a contention is raised on his behalf that the arrangement between Sham Peary and Mohini Mohan by which the former gave up the right (which she inherited from her deceased son Sashi Mohan) in favour of the latter in consideration of the maintenance of Rs 150 a month is not binding upon him (Moti Lall Das) after the death of Sham Peary. The question was not raised in the Court below and in a suit upon the mortgage, no question of title paramount should be gone into. This contention is accordingly disallowed.

SUKHLAL RAI v. LACHMI NARAYAN RAI.

The result is that the decree of the Court below will be varied in this way. It will be declared that the property mortgaged to the extent of the 4-annas share which Sham Peary inherited from Sashi Mohun is subject to the charge of Rs. 150 a month in her favour. The interest under the deeds of mortgage executed by Priyomoyee and Mohini Mohan respectively will be calculated at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. together with simple interest at that rate upon the amount of interest which was not punctually paid. The principle of calculation will be according to that adopted in the plaint. The usual mortgage decree will be prepared in each of the suits giving the defendants six months' time from this date (3rd April 1917) for redemption. In all other respects the appeals will be dismissed with three-fourths costs, except that in calculating the costs incurred on account of Court-fee, the costs will be proportionate in inverse ratio to the success of each party, and only one hearing fee will be allowed in the appeals against the final decrees.

Decrees varied.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

EXECUTION SECOND APPEAL NO. 1745
OF 1915.

February 13, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rafique and Mr. Justice Piggott.

SUKHLAL RAI AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS

versus

LACHMI NARAYAN RAI AND OTHERS—
JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution—Decree, construction of—Mortgage—Executing Court, powers of.

One G. was a co-sharer in four villages to the extent of eight gandas in each village. He executed a deed of mortgage in respect of his eight-gandas share in the villages in favour of R. and J. The latter obtained a decree for sale on foot of their mortgage and in execution applied for the sale of a four-annas share in mahal G. in each of the four villages, stating that the description of the property given in the mortgage-deed as eight gandas came to four annas in mahal G. in each village. The judgment-debtor filed objections and contended that only eight-gandas out of the entire four annas, that is to say, one-tenth of the original share in each village was meant:

Held, that the property directed by the decree to be sold was the entire share of the mortgagor, which after partition was described as four annas in mahal G. in each village, and that the mortgagor had mortgaged his entire share which he described as eight gandas in each of the four villages. [p. 889, cols. 1 & 2.]

Execution second appeal against the order of the District Judge, Azamgarh.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad (with him Mr. Hari-bans Sahai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the following facts. One Gaya Prasad Rai was a co-sharer in four villages to the extent of eight gandas. On the 2nd of April 1898 he executed a deed of mortgage in respect of his eight-gandas share in the villages in favour of Ram Bachan and Jagat Rai. The mortgagees brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. In execution of their decree the mortgagees applied for the sale of a four-anna share in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each of the four villages, stating that the description of the property given in the mortgage-deed as eight gandas came to four annas in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village. The judgment-debtors filed objections. They said that a partition among the co-sharers of the four villages had taken place as long ago as 1896 and it came into operation from the 1st of July 1897, some eight months prior to the execution of the mortgage in suit. The share of Gaya Prasad Rai before partition was eight gandas in each village; but subsequent to the partition, after formation of fourteen mahals, the share of Gaya Prasad was described as four annas in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village. It must, therefore, be taken that what Gaya Prasad mortgaged under the deed of the 2nd of April 1898 was not his entire share of four annas in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village, but only eight gandas out of the entire four annas, that is to say, one-tenth of the original share in each village. The Court of First Instance purported to allow this objection, but as a matter of fact ordered sale of eight gandas in each village "without any addition." This would involve the selling of $\frac{1}{40}$ th share of the proprietary rights in each village which would be really what the decree-holders wanted. On appeal the case was put by the learned Judge in a clearer way for the objectors, i. e., judgment-debtors. But the learned Judge upheld the decree of the First Court. The decree-holders have come up to this Court in second appeal and contend that the order of the lower Courts is likely to mislead the intending purchasers or bidders at the auction and to lead to further litigation. For the judgment-debtors it is urged that the decree-holders cannot go behind the decree and they are bound by its terms. They cannot sell any other property than that which is mentioned in the decree. The decree directs the sale of the mortgaged property as it is described in the mortgage-deed of the 2nd of April 1898. The description in the deed is eight gandas in each village. It is, therefore, quite clear, as the partition had taken place prior to the execution of the mortgage deed, that the parties to the deed knew perfectly well what the share of the mortgagor was. The mortgagees, if they meant to take the entire share of the mortgagor as security, would have got four-annas share in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village entered in the deed. In their plaint the mortgagees did not say that the property mentioned in the mortgage-deed was the same as four annas share in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village, nor did they bring this fact to the notice of the Court at the time of the passing of the decree. It must, therefore, be taken that all that was mortgaged was eight gandas out of the share of Gaya Prasad. We do not think that there is any force in the contention for the judgment-debtors. On a reference to the deed of mortgage of the 2nd of April 1898 it is quite clear that Gaya Prasad mortgaged his entire share which he described as eight gandas in each of the four villages. Probably Gaya Prasad and other co-sharers had not by that time become quite familiar with the description of their shares as brought about by the partition of 1896 and consequently the old description found place in the mortgage-deed. The decree naturally followed the description given in the mortgage-deed. We have to find out what property ought to be sold in execution of this decree. We have no hesitation in holding that the property directed by the decree to be sold is the entire share of Gaya Prasad, which after partition is described as four annas in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village. We allow this appeal and direct that in execution of the decree in question the sale of four-annas share of Gaya Prasad in Mahal Gaya Prasad in each village be proclaimed. The appellants are entitled to their costs here and in the Court below.

MATHAR DRAVIA SAHAYA ELA NIDHI CO. LTD. v. SUBRAMANIA PILLAI.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS SECOND APPEALS Nos. 123 AND 124 OF 1916.

February 7, 1917.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice.

IN C. M. S. A. No. 123 OF 1916

MATHAR DRAVIA SAHAYA ELA
NIDHI COMPANY, LTD., AND ANOTHER—
JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS
Nos. 1 TO 3—APPELLANTS

AND

IN C. M. S. A. No. 124 OF 1916

SUBRAMANIA PILLAI—DEFENDANT No. 3
—PETITIONER—APPELLANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Adjustment of decree out of Court not certified to Court, whether can be recognised.

An adjustment of a decree out of Court can, under no circumstances, be recognised unless certified to Court. [p. 890, col. 1.]

Alathoor Eadrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen, 12 Ind. Cas. 562; 36 M. 357; 10 M. L. T. 396; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 473; 24 M. L. J. 541, followed.

Trimback Ramkrishna v. Eari Laxman, 7 Ind. Cas. 940; 34 B. 575; 12 Bom. L. R. 686, dissented from.

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 48 of 1916, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Srivaikuntam, in Execution Petition No. 699 of 1915, in Original Suit No. 150 of 1912.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 49 of 1916, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Srivaikuntam, in Execution Appeal No. 60 of 1916, in Execution Petition No. 699 of 1915, in Original Suit No. 150 of 1912.

KO KYAW ZAN v. DAW MYA.

Messrs. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar and Mr. A. Subbarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.

These appeals against appellate orders coming on for orders as to admission, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—I am bound by the decision of this Court in Alathoor Badrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1), which dissented from the view expressed by Heaton, J., in Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (2) which has recently been followed in that Court. The decision in Alathoor Badrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (1) was in accordance with the current of authority in this Court and may, I hope, be treated as having settled this question here. The Legislature, when it considered it necessary to legislate against the possibility of executing Courts being flooded with false cases of satisfaction out of Court set up merely for purposes of delay, and provided that no such adjustments should be recognised unless certified, must have been alive to the fact that it was giving an opportunity to dishonest decree-holder to commit fraud by denying adjustments which had not been so certified and must have regarded them as the lesser evil. It is not, however, open to the Court, it seems to me, to guard against this evil by recognising in execution proceedings adjustments out of Court contrary to the express provisions of the Statute. These appeals are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

V.R.P.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 562; 36 M. 357; 10 M. L. T. 396; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 473; 24 M. L. J. 541.

(2) 7 Ind. Cas. 940; 34 B. 575; 12 Bom. L. R. 686.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 146 OF 1916.

June 5, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Maung Kin.

KO KYAW ZAN AND OTHERS—

APPLICANTS

versus

DAW MYA — RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 4 (1) — Judgment of Small Cause Court, contents of—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25 — Revision, grounds for.

The judgment of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the point for determination and the decision thereon. [p. 890, col. 2.]

Where the decree of a Court of Small Causes, which must also include the judgment, involves a clear error of law, the High Court has power to interfere with the decree, but the error of law must be a substantial one and the Court must be satisfied that there has been a failure of justice. [p. 890, col. 2; p. 891, col. 1.]

Nilmani Maitra v. Mathura Nath Joardar, 5 C. L. J. 413 at p. 415, relied upon.

Where the point for determination is obvious, the omission to state it in the judgment cannot be deemed to have caused a failure of justice. [p. 890, col. 2.]

Mr. Agaleg, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ko Ko Gyi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision arises out of a suit for money alleged to be due on six pro notes.

The defence was denial of the execution and receipt of consideration by the alleged executant.

This suit was decreed and the defendants have made this application for revision. The only ground pressed before me is that the judgment of the lower Court which was a Small Cause Court was not in form in accordance with law. The judgment is as follows:—

“I see no reason for disbelieving the evidence adduced by the plaintiff and decree the suit with costs as claimed against the defendants in their representative capacity”.

It no doubt contravenes the provisions of Order XX, rule 4 (1), which provides that judgments of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the points for determination and the decision thereon, because the point for determination is not stated therein. Mr. Agabeg asked me to send the case back to the Court of Small Causes directing it to give a judgment which will be in form in accordance with the rule cited above. But the point for determination is obvious and the omission to state it cannot have caused any failure of justice. And I do not see what the applicant will gain by having this obvious point stated in the judgment; the decision will be the same.

In Nilmani Maitra v. Mathura Nath Joardar (1) Banerjee, J., lays down the law which gives this Court power to interfere in revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to the following effect:—“Where the decree of a Court of Small Causes, which must also include the judgment, involves a clear error of law, the High Court has power to interfere but.....the error of law must be a substantial one and this

(1) 5 C. L. J. 413 at p. 415.

LAL MAN NAIK v. KANHAYA LALL.

Court must be satisfied that there has been a failure of justice." Obviously, in the case before me although there is an error of law, it is neither substantial nor one which can be said to have caused a failure of justice, having regard to the nature of the suit and the defence. I shall dismiss the application and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 177 OF 1916.

May 22, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mullick.

LAL MAN NAIK AND OTHERS—

APPELLANTS

versus

KANHAYA LALL PANDEY AND ANOTHER
—RESPONDENTS.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), s. 224 (2)
—Declaration, suit for, that entry in Record of Rights is wrong—Appellate decree by Judicial Commissioner—Appeal, second, whether lies to High Court—Decree, meaning of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Ch. XLII.

Where the Judicial Commissioner in pronouncing judgment in an appeal makes an appellate decree within the meaning of section 224 (2) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, there is a second appeal from his decree to the High Court and the provisions of Chapter XLII of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, apply. [p. 892, col. 1.]

In a suit under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act filed in the Revenue Court for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights is wrong and that the lands are the zerait lands of the plaintiffs and that the defendants have no right of occupancy therein, a second appeal lies to the High Court from the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in appeal. [p. 892, col. 1.]

The word 'decree' in section 224, clause 2, of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act means 'decision'. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Hazaribagh.

Messrs. D. N. Mitra and B. N. Mitra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bankim Ch. Dey, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the Record of Rights published under section 84 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the lands in suit were shown as the raiya holding of the defendants. The plaintiffs, who are mortgagées, thereupon brought a suit under section 87 of the Act before the Revenue Officer for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights was wrong and that the lands were their zerait lands and that the defendants had no right of occupancy therein.

The Revenue Officer dismissed the suit. There was then an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner who reversed the decision of the Revenue Officer and decreed the suit. The present second appeal is preferred by the defendants.

The first question that has to be determined is whether or not a second appeal lies to this Court. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that the suit was one under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for the decision of a dispute regarding an entry in the Record of Rights under Chapter XII of the Act and by Notification No. 786 T. R., dated the 24th of May 1909 made by the Local Government under powers conferred by section 264 of the Act, an appeal from the Revenue Officer's decision lay to the Judicial Commissioner. It is urged that although a first appeal lies to the Judicial Commissioner, there is no provision of law which allows a second appeal to this Court.

Now the matter turns upon the interpretation of section 224 (2) of the Act. The Judicial Commissioner, by the Notification above mentioned, was not following the procedure prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. He was following the special procedure prescribed under sections 220 to 223 of the Act. What the object of the Legislature was in thus restricting the Judicial Commissioner in the trial of the appeal is not for me to say. But it is quite conceivable that these sections, which deal with the power of dismissing an appeal for default, hearing it ex parte, re-admitting an appeal if so dismissed, and delivering judgment in the manner provided by section 170 of the Act, may be found in practice to be quite insufficient for the satisfactory trial of an appeal. For instance, the Judicial Commissioner may consider it desirable to take additional evidence or to remand or the parties may desire to file cross-appeals and objections. In the absence of definite provisions for these matters it is difficult to see what procedure the Appellate Court should follow. However that may be, the question is whether the Judicial Commissioner, when he pronounces judgment in an appeal, makes an appellate decree within the meaning of section 224 (2). If he does, then there is a second appeal from his decree to the High Court and the provisions of Chapter XLII of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to such a second appeal.

LAL MAN NAIK v. KANHAYA LALI.

The word "the decree" is not defined in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. Section 224, clause (1), gives a right of appeal to the Judicial Commissioner or the High Court against a "judgment" of the Deputy Commissioner. The notification published under section 87 and referred to above gives the right of appeal against the "decision" of the Revenue Officer. What then is the meaning to be assigned to the word "decree" in section 224, clause 2? In my opinion "decree" means nothing more than "decision." Therefore if the decision is one made under Chapter XVI of the Act, then a second appeal lies. Next what is the meaning to be attached to the words "decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner under this Chapter?" Do they mean a decree passed in exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by this Chapter? or do they mean also a decree passed in compliance with the procedure ordained by this Chapter? I think the words ought to be given a wide meaning and made to bear the latter meaning also. And as the Judicial Commissioner was following the procedure prescribed by sections 220 to 223 of this Chapter, his decision was a decree under this Chapter and, therefore, a second appeal lies to this Court.

But the learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal at all and he relies upon a Notification of the 29th of October 1909 prescribing that in respect of decisions under section 87 of the Act, arising out of a Survey made under section 119 of the Act, an appeal from the decision of the Revenue Officer lies either to his immediate superior in the Settlement Department or to the Commissioner of the Division, as the case may be.

It is true that the course of appeal against a decision under section 87 of the Act is different according as the Survey is one under Chapter XIV or one under Chapter XII. But in this case there is no evidence whatsoever that the Survey was under Chapter XIV. The latter Chapter empowers the Local Government, on the application of parties, to direct by notification that a Survey and Record be made of lands in any specified local area which are landlords' privileged lands within the meaning of section 118 of the Act. The learned Judicial Commissioner before whom this point appears to have been taken clearly states that it has not been shown that any Survey under section 119 was ordered by the Local Government. Therefore, upon the facts, the Record of Rights was one under Chapter XII and an appeal from the decision of the Revenue Officer under section 87 lay to the Judicial Commissioner and, as I have already held, a second appeal lies to this Court.

There remains the question of the merits of the second appeal. The learned Judicial Commissioner has found that the lands in suit have never been settled with the defendants; that the defendants were in possession in 1960 and 1969 on payment of half the produce but that no tenancy in respect of that possession had been proved. This is a finding of fact which must conclude the matter. The learned Vakil for the appellants urges that sufficient reason has not been given for holding that the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted. The learned Judicial Commissioner had evidence before him upon which he could come to a finding and in second appeal it is incompetent for me to interfere with his decision on findings of fact. The learned Judicial Commissioner, however, while declaring that the defendants have no right to a tenancy, has made a declaration that the lands are zerast. Now, this term is not known to the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and if the learned Judicial Commissioner intended to find that the lands were the privileged lands of the landlord within the meaning of Chapter XIV, he should have clearly stated that custom as required by section 118 had been proved, but there is no clear finding in his judgment as regards any such custom. The learned Vakil for the respondents, however, agrees to accept a decree merely declaring that the defendants have no tenancy in the lands in suit.

The order, therefore, that I will make is that the decree of the learned Judicial Commissioner be set aside and in lieu thereof let a decree be made declaring that the defendants have no right of tenancy in the lands in suit. The appeal is, therefore, decreed in this modified form. The respondents will get their costs in all the Courts.

BOMMANABOYINA KOTINAGULU v. RAMARAJU ANKAYYA.

Appeal partly accepted.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1531 AND 1533
OF 1915.

February 23, 1917.

Present:—Justice Sir William Ayling, K_T, and Mr. Justice Napier.

BOMMANABOYINA KOTINAGULU AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAMARAJU ANKAYYA AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS NOS. 2 TO 5—

RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17, cls. (1) (c), (2) (XI)—Endorsement, unregistered, of payment on mortgage-deed, admissibility of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 97, 62—Earnest money, suit for, on contract for sale of land—Limitation.

Endorsements of payments on mortgage deeds are admissible in evidence, though unregistered. They fall within the scope of clause (2) (XI), and not of clause (1) (c) of section 17 of the Registration Act. [p. 893, col. 2.]

Dupaguntla Subba Rao v. Gollapudi Elthirajulu, 26 Ind. Cas. 360; (1915) M. W. N. 33, distinguished.

A suit for the recovery of an advance paid under a contract for sale of land on the Court's refusal to decree specific performance is governed by Article 97, and not by Article 62 of the Limitation Act. [p. 894, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suits Nos. 74 of 1913 and 501 of 1912 preferred against those of the District Munsif, Narasaraopet, in Original Suits Nos. 425 and 427 of 1911.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These were suits for specific performance of two contracts to sell two items of property, which were already mortgaged to the plaintiff by the defendant.

The plaintiff had been in possession, but as found by the lower Appellate Court, decrees had been obtained by the defendant for recovery of the two items sometimes after August 10th, 1911. The prayer for specific performance was rejected, but the Court decreed repayment of the consideration.

The first point taken is that Exhibits A1 and A2, endorsements on the mortgage documents, are not admissible in evidence as not being registered. This objection cannot prevail. On their true construction, we do not think that they acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the limitation or extinction of a right within the meaning of section 17 (1) (c) of the Registration Act. The true scope of this section was pointed out in Venkayyar v. Venkatasubbayyar (1) and we can find nothing in the terms of these endorsements which amount to such consideration. Further, the object of these endorsements was to acknowledge the payment of a part of the mortgage money and so they fall within the scope of section 17 (2) (XI). We are pressed with a decision of this Court in Dupaguntla Subba Rao v. Gollapudi Elthirajulu (2), but that decision was on an endorsement of an entirely different character and we have only to construe the endorsement with which we are dealing. The principles laid down in the case of Venkayyar v. Venkatasubbayyar (1) have lately been re-affirmed in a case reported as Parasharampant v. Rama Yellappa Lakundi (3). The endorsements are, therefore, admissible in evidence and prove the discharge of the mortgage pro tanto.

The next objection is that the suit is barred under Article 62 of the Limitation Act as more than three years had elapsed since the receipt of the money. We think that the lower Appellate Court rightly applied Article 97. On the language of the judgment the Court clearly found an oral contract for sale, though the Judge refused to grant specific performance. There having been a contract, consideration necessarily existed and it was not till the date of the decree for recovery of the property that the consideration failed. We are referred to a decision of the Privy

(1) 3 M. 53; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 593.

(2) 26 Ind. Cas. 360; (1915) M. W. N. 33.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 588; 34 B. 202; 11 Bom. L. R. 1321.

BADAL MOLLA v. CHEMAI MONDAL.

Council in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (4). That was a much stronger case than this, because the Privy Council found that the parties had never in fact been, ad idem, yet they applied Article 97. The decision of the Board in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (5) is directly in point, for there they applied Article 97 to a case where a party endeavoured to obtain possession of the property the subject of the contract and held that limitation ran from the date of the failure. The appeals must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

V.R.P.

(4) 11 A. 47; 15 I. A. 211; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 260; 12 Ind. Jur. 450; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 458 (P. C.).

(5) 19 C. 123; 18 I. A. 158; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 91; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 527 (P. C.).

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 871
OF 1915.

March 19, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and
Mr. Justice Smither.

BADAL MOLLA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

CHEMAI MONDAL AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 98—Mortgage, anomalous—Redemption, clog on.

One of the elementary rules of equity is that once a mortgage always a mortgage, and that a mortgagee should not be allowed to obtain any undue advantage by his mortgage except the amount of the principal, interest and costs due on his mortgage. [p. 896, col. 1.]

Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to all mortgages including anomalous mortgages within the meaning of section 98. [p. 896, col. 1.]

A mortgage by conditional sale is not an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 896, col. 1.]

Where under an usufructuary mortgage the mortgagee was put into possession to receive the usufruct of property in lieu of interest, and there was a condition in the mortgage that if the mortgagor should fail to pay the rent of the mortgaged holding to the landlord, the transaction will become an absolute sale in favour of the mortgagee;

Held, that the condition of forfeiture or the transaction becoming an absolute sale in the event of the mortgagor failing to pay the rent was void, being a clog on the equity of redemption. [p. 896, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Pergunnabs, dated the 19th January 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, Alipur, dated the 29th August 1913.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extract from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"In this case the plaintiffs brought a suit to redeem a mortgage. Their case is that their predecessor-in-interest, Adel Molla, executed an usufructuary mortgage on the 16th Kartick 1301 in favour of defendant No. 1 for Rs. 88.

Under the terms of the deed, the defendant No. 1 was to hold the mortgaged property in lieu of interest and Adel Molla was to pay the rent year by year. They say that Adel accordingly paid the rent till his death in 1304. When he died he left as his heirs the present plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. Being unable to pay the rent, the plaintiffs say that they made over by an oral agreement another one bigha one cotta to the defendant out of the profits of which the rent was to be paid.

They have now offered to repay the principal but their offer has been refused; hence this suit.

The defence set up is that under the terms of the mortgage bond the mortgagor was to pay the rent due and show the receipt every year to the mortgagee. His successors failed to do so and so under the terms of the bond the mortgage, which was not only a usufructuary one but also a mortgage by conditional sale, became a deed of absolute sale. Hence without the intervention of any Court the mortgagor's successors had lost their right of redemption. It is further alleged, though the evidence does not prove it, that Adel's heirs agreed not to redeem. Other points were pleaded which are not raised in appeal.

The learned Munsif held that no evidence could be admitted under section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act to prove that, as a matter of fact, the plaintiffs handed over the extra one bigha one cotta to the defendant to secure the payment of the rent. He further treated the mortgage bond as an anomalous mortgage, and holding that, therefore, the parties were bound by its terms to the letter and those terms had not been complied with, held that the non-payment of the rent had, without the intervention of the Court in a foreclosure suit (such suit having admittedly not been filed), converted the mortgage into an out-and-out sale from the date of default in paying the landlord's rent. He, therefore, dismissed the suit. * * * *

BADAL MOLLA v. CHEMAI MONDAL.

* * * * The mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage, with a further contract given by the mortgagor which reads: "I will pay the rent myself and I will present the dakhila to you at the end of the year. If I do not do so you will be entitled to enforce this kat kobala without any objection on my part and the kat kobala will become a saf (absolute) kobala." It is argued that this condition makes the whole document a combination of a usufructuary mortgage and a mortgage by way of conditional sale, and not an anomalous mortgage as the Munsif has found. Therefore the rules as to the necessity of a suit for foreclosure and the doctrine 'once a mortgage always a mortgage' apply. But the essence of a mortgage by way of conditional sale is that there should be a certain date on which the debt is to be paid; there is no such date in this deed. Further, if it had been only a usufructuary mortgage there could have been no suit for foreclosure.

I agree then that the mortgage must be held to be an anomalous mortgage and so the parties are bound by the contract induced therein under section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act * * * *

I hold, therefore, that the mortgage was an anomalous one and that on default of the mortgagor in complying with its terms it became an out-and-out sale. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to redeem. I dismiss the appeal with costs."

Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterjee, for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. On the construction of the mortgage bond the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the document in question was a kat kobala and it has become a khas kobala (out-and-out sale) for breach of the covenant contained therein, viz., for non-payment of rent by the mortgagors, and so the plaintiff has no right of redemption. My contention is that the document in question cannot be anything but an usufructuary mortgage with a covenant that in case of non-payment of rent it would become an out-and-out sale; but the covenant for non-payment being by way of penalty is bad in law and hence not enforceable. So the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to redeem the mortgage. It is a clog on the equity of redemption and is, therefore, void.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen, for the Respondents.—The document in question is only a type of anomalous mortgage within the meaning of section 98, Transfer of Property Act, because the transaction does not come within any of the three kinds of mortgage mentioned in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. If then the transaction is an anomalous mortgage, we have to look to the document only for the purpose of ascertaining the rights and liabilities of the parties. Section 98 obviously excludes the applicability of section 60. Under section 98 the parties can contract as they like. Their contract cannot be fettered by the operation of section 60. With regard to the anomalous mortgage the latest case is Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (1). The document cannot be an usufructuary mortgage within the meaning of section 58.

[FLETCHER, J.—The case of Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (1) is against you.]

No. The case is not against me on the point now at issue.

It can be distinguished from the present case. The present case cannot be one of usufructuary mortgage, because in the case of an usufructuary mortgage there must be provision for repayment within a certain date, whereas in the present case there is none. The definition of usufructuary mortgage as given in section 58, Transfer of Property Act, is very clear. Under all these circumstances the lower Appellate Court was justified in holding that the mortgagor cannot now exercise his right of redemption.

Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterjee, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 19th January 1915, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the first Court at

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 54; 38 M. 667; 14 M. L. T. 547; (1914) M. W. N. 81; 26 M. L. J. 47.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

Alipur. The plaintiff brought the suit for redemption. It is admitted that the plaintiff's predecessor was the mortgagor and the defendant No. 1 was the mortgagee. The equity of redemption has not been foreclosed or put an end to either by the acts of the parties subsequent to the mortgage or by an order of the Court. One would have expected, therefore, that a case for redemption had clearly arisen, because one of the elementary rules of equity is that once a mortgage always a mortgage. The Courts of Equity have always held that a mortgagee should not be allowed to obtain any undue advantage by his mortgage except the amount of the principal, interest and costs due on his mortgage. It is not necessary to go into the cases on this point. In the present case, however, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that the mortgage is an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act and that, therefore, no right of redemption subsists. I am not prepared, as at present advised, to agree with the view of the learned Judge that section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to an anomalous mortgage. I am inclined to think that section 60 applies to all mortgages. But be that as it may, the question in this case is whether the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was right in coming to the conclusion that the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage. The document before us is stated to be a kat kobala, which I am told means a mortgage by way of conditional sale. A mortgage by way of conditional sale is clearly not an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. The document itself seems to be an usufructuary mortgage within the definition contained in section 58 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act. In this case, the mortgagee was put into possession to receive the usufruct of the property in lieu of interest and, therefore, in that view the mortgage clearly comes within the meaning of section 58 (d). The contract that, if the mortgagor should fail to pay the rent to the landlord, the mortgagee should be entitled to enforce the kat kobala and that the kat kobala should be treated as a deed of absolute sale obviously is a clog on the equity of redemption. It is not necessary to go into the authorities on this point. They have been cited in the case of Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (1). We do not really want an authority that a condition of that nature does not nullify the rest of the deed, namely, that it is a mortgage and further that the mortgage provided that, when the principal money would be paid off in one lump sum, the mortgagee would return the property. The condition of forfeiture or the transaction becoming an absolute sale in the event of the mortgagor failing to pay the rent is clearly void. In that view, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court ought to have made an ordinary decree for redemption directing the usual account to be taken of what was due to the mortgagor on the footing of the mortgage security. The present appeal is, therefore, allowed and the case is remanded to the lower Appellate Court for the learned Judge there to take an account of what is due to the mortgagee on the footing of the security bond and upon ascertaining the amount due, he should fix a date within which the money ought to be paid and the redemption made; and on the plaintiff's failure to do that, he should direct that the plaintiff's right to redeem shall be extinguished. In taking the account, the learned Judge will also consider the other matter raised by the plaintiff, namely, whether the rent was paid out of the additional land made over to the mortgagee. The appellants will get their costs in this Court. The mortgagee will be entitled, according to the ordinary rule in a redemption suit, to add to their security the costs incurred by them in the Courts below.

SMITHER, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL SUIT No. 90 OF 1914.

November 15, 1916.

Present:—Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt., and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

SRI SRI SRI MEERJ SRI PUSAPATI
VIZIARAMA GAJAPATHIRAJU
MAHARAJAH MAUYA SULTAN BAHADUR, RAJAH OF VIZA-

YANAGARAM AND ANOTHER

—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Alluvion—Accretion, principle for, relating to

SECRETARY OF STATE V. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

Indian rivers—Lankas, formation of—Title—Derelict and alluvial lands—Bengal Regulation II of 1825.

Land, to be an accretion, must, according to the Common Law, be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees. By 'imperceptible' is meant imperceptible in its progress, i.e., step by step as the accretion is being formed and not imperceptible in the result, i.e., after a long lapse of time. It is the manner of the formation, not the result, which decides whether the addition is an accretion or not. If the addition was by gradual and insensible degrees, it is an accretion, while if a considerable increase takes place at one time, it is not an accretion. The increase must be imperceptible to an ordinary person as the addition is being formed. [p. 899, col. 2; p. 900, col. 1.]

Natural silting up, if gradual and imperceptible, will give the land to the adjoining owner. [p. 900, col. 1.]

A perceptible addition made in the course of a single year during the annual rise of a river is a sudden increase and is not an accretion to the adjoining riparian land. [p. 902, col. 2.]

There is no reason for giving the mud and sand deposited in large quantities in the bed of a river, which belongs to the Crown in trust for the public, to the adjoining owner simply because the deposit is also adherent to the adjoining land, so long as such deposits are distinguishable from the adjoining land. The principle of identity is applicable only to derelict lands exposed by the sudden recession of the sea or change of a river's course. [p. 902, col. 2.]

In adopting the law as to alluvion in India the Courts should be guided by local physical conditions. The principle laid down in Bengal Regulation II of 1825 affords the best practical guide in applying the law of accretion to the case of large Indian rivers. Under that Regulation, all that is necessary is that the accretion should be by gradual alluvial process; it need not be imperceptible, and it need not be slow. [p. 903, col. 1.]

The fact that original boundary is known or ascertainable does not render the law of accretion inapplicable. [p. 904, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 63 of 1912.

Mr. V. Ramesam, Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General) and Mr. S. Desikachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—In this case we have had the benefit of an exhaustive argument on both sides and are particularly indebted to the learned Government Pleader, Mr. V. Ramesam, for the pains he has taken in presenting the facts to us in the clearest and most intelligible light. I have also had the advantage of perusing the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, and can add nothing material to it. The evidence leaves no doubt in my mind that the lower Court's decision on the question of fact is correct. The nucleus of the suit lanka is, not an island formed vertically in the bed of the Godaveri, but an accretion to plaintiff's pre-existing Vootachiguru Lanka formed in 1853 and severed from the latter about four years later. I do not think we should be justified in refusing to recognise plaintiff's title to the land thus formed on the ground of the comparative rapidity with which the formation took place. No doubt the reported decisions of the English Courts would seem to indicate that they would refuse to treat such a formation as an accretion, if it occurred in an English river: an addition of over 600 acres in the course of a single flood season could not be described as slow and gradual according to the standard of additions by alluvion in English rivers. But there is nothing abnormal in such a phenomenon in Indian rivers: and although several cases have been quoted in which the Privy Council has dealt with claims to accretion by alluvion in Indian rivers, I find none in which this claim has been rejected merely on the ground of the extent of land thus newly formed and the shortness of the period occupied in formation. In the cases Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1) and Hursuhai Singh v. Syud Loctf Ali Khan (2) the lands claimed as accretions measured in round figures 2,500 and 5,000 acres respectively. The exact length of time occupied in formation does not appear, but it would seem to have been within a space of about fifteen years in each case. The claims by accretions were rejected solely on the principle of re-formation: and there is nothing in the judgments to suggest that apart from this, their Lordships would have hesitated to admit the claim by accretion. It seems to me the recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces: and the different condition of Indian and English rivers is such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3). Such a difference cannot be ignored in the application of the legal principles of alluvial accretion: and it seems to have been given effect to in Bengal Regulation II of 1825. The only requirement in section 4 of that enactment is that this accession should be gradual, not that it should be slow or imperceptible. Abnormal changes due to sudden alterations of course and violent avulsions are separately provided for; but all accessions by gradual alluvion are treated alike, irrespective of the rate of formation.

(1) 13 M. L. A. 467; 14 W. R. (P. C.); 11 5 B. L. R. 521; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 336; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 594; 20 E. R. 625.

(2) 2 I. A. 28; 14 B. L. R. 268; 23 W. R. 8.

SECRETARY OF STATE V. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

I must confess to some doubt as to the extent to which the rapidly changing character of the formations in Indian rivers should affect the principles of re-formation. The permanence of the formations by alluvial accretions seems to vary inversely with their rapidity: and the lanka formed in the course of a year or two is frequently destroyed in an equally short space of time. Whether the proprietor of such an evanescent property should be deemed to be entitled ipso facto to all subsequent formations over the same portion of the river bed, whatever their origin, seems to me open to question. The re-formation principle was certainly recognised and acted upon by the Privy Council in two of the cases cited above, but the circumstances were peculiar and its general applicability to cases like the one before us does not follow. Fortunately although a certain amount of argument was devoted to this point, it is not one which need be decided for the purpose of the present appeal.

I concur in the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother and would dismiss this appeal with costs.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—This is a suit by the zemindar of Vizayanagaram against the Government for a declaration that a certain lanka formed in the bed of the Godaverri belongs to him as an accretion to his adjoining lankas. The defendant, the Government, denied that the suit lanka was an accretion in the legal sense of the term and also urged that even if the suit lanka was an accretion, it was not formed laterally as an adjunct to or in contiguity with any lanka belonging to the plaintiff, but was formed vertically as an island in the bed of the Godaverri. At the place where the suit land lies the Godaverri is both navigable and tidal and it is not disputed that the bed of the river at that place belongs to the Government. The lanka in dispute is now an island surrounded on all sides by the river. The Trial Judge decided that the lanka was formed by alluvion in contiguity with the plaintiff's land and was subsequently separated therefrom by the river and gave a decree to the plaintiff. The Government appeals.

(3) 25 Ind. Cas. 467; 42 C. 489; 41 I. A. 221; 18 C. W. N. 1217; (1914) M. W. N. 654; 1 L. W. 733; 16 M. L. T. 319; 12 A. L. J. 1193; 20 C. L. J. 385; 16 Bom. L. R. 901 (P. C.).

In the Court below the main contest seems to have been raised on the question, whether the suit land was formed as an island surrounded on all sides by the waters of the Godaverri. In fact, the Trial Judge devotes practically the whole of his judgment to the consideration of this question. In this Court, more especially after we had intimated to the Government Pleader that we agreed with the lower Court that the suit lanka was originally formed in contiguity with the plaintiff's land, the main arguments addressed to us were on the second question, viz., whether the suit lanka was an accretion in the technical sense of the term. The parties are not in agreement as to the time when the suit lanka was formed.

The materials for the determination of the questions in dispute here consist of the several maps or plans of the river at the place of dispute from time to time, the amarakam or rent roll accounts of the plaintiff which are exhibited as T series, and certain muchilikas executed in favour of the plaintiff for his lankas for some of the years between 1873 and 1905. The oral evidence in the case is not of much value.

[After reviewing the history of the lanka in dispute, his Lordship proceeded]:—

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

It is clear from the foregoing review of the history of the formation of the suit lanka that the first question raised in this case, namely, whether the land in dispute was formed originally in the bed of the river as an island (i.e.), as a vertical formation, or as a lateral extension of the plaintiff's lanka or at least of the site of the plaintiff's lanka must be found for the plaintiff. It is also clear that the suit lanka was formed very rapidly and in some years during the annual rise very large additions were made, which could not but be perceptible as soon as the water subsided.

The further question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to the suit land as an accretion to his lankas. The learned Advocate-General strongly pressed on us that his original Betaru Lanka and the Thurpu Lanka, delivered in 1870, and the jutting out land called the Vuta Lanka and Chiguru Lanka on the south-eastern corner where the original Betaru Lanka and Thurpu Lanka joined, were really one lanka without there being any discriminating boundary between these portions, and was one big block of land by whatever name portions of the same may be described, and was subject to erosions or encroachments by the river and the additions formed were additions to the lanka as a whole and not to any particular portion of it. He laid stress on this matter as a basis for his contention that, however large in extent the additions may appear to be, as the formations were in contiguity with a long riverine line, they fall within the definition of accretions. The question then as a question of fact is whether the additions were additions made to a long coast line; I am inclined to think that the additions were to a somewhat narrow coast line of the land belonging to the plaintiff, that is, that the additions were in fact in or about the place and in extension of the Vuta Lanka and Chiguru Lanka which occupied the narrow promontory and the additions were not to a long coast line. In the course of the argument here and in the evidence before the lower Court the plaintiff, who in his plaint claimed the suit land as an accretion to his lankas, also put forward a case of re-formation in situ of his own lanka, as regards portions of the new formation. An examination of Exhibit 22, which for this purpose may be taken to be fairly accurate, shows that the re-formation at the site of lands which belonged to the plaintiff is only a very insignificant portion of the huge block of land which is now claimed by the plaintiff. At the same time, I accept the argument of the learned Advocate-General that it is not possible to say the exact degree of additions and erosions from time to time, though I think that in some years, at least, there have been very considerable additions, especially in the year 1883 when there was such a large addition as 76-7-7 putties amounting to about 610 acres in the course of a single year. It is also clear that out of that addition of 610 acres, a considerable portion must have been washed away between 1887 and 1888 and there must have been subsequent additions till about the date of the suit the whole island was over a thousand acres in extent. These being my conclusions on the facts of the case, it remains now to apply the law.

The law of accretion, which is now a part of the law of all civilised countries, seems to have had its origin in the civil law, though no doubt in the application of the principle the conditions prevailing in different countries have necessarily to be taken into account. French Code, sections 556 to 563, German Civil Law, Article 331, Schuster. It is now quite settled in England that land to be an accretion must be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees. By imperceptible is meant imperceptible in its progress, i. e., step by step as the accretion is being formed, and not imperceptible in the result, i. e., after a long lapse of time. It is scarcely necessary to refer to more than two cases, one the leading case of King v. Lord Yarborough (4), reported subnomine King v. Lord Yarborough (5), a decision of the House of Lords, and the other Attorney-General v. M'Carthy (6). It is the manner of the formation not the result which decides

(4) (1824) 3 B. & C. 91; 4 D. & R. 790; 107 E. R. 668; 27 R. R. 292.

(5) (1828) 2 Bligh (N. S.) 147; 1 Dow. & Cl. 178; 5 Bing. 163; 4 E. R. 1087; 31 R. R. 35.]

(6) (1911) 2 Irish Rep. 260; 12 Ir. L. R. 339.

SECRETARY OF STATE V. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

whether the addition is an accretion or not, and it was said that if the addition was by gradual and insensible degrees it is an accretion, while if a considerable increase takes place at one time it is not an accretion. King v. Lord Yarborough (4). In Attorney-General v. M'Carthy (6) Justice Gibson pointed out that a sudden accretion would not give the land to the owner of the adjoining land. He stated, however, the difficulty in the application of the doctrine in these terms: "What is the base to which the addition is to be made and what is to be the method of observation? Is the increase to be latent at the end of a week or of a month?" He answered the question by saying that it must be imperceptible to an ordinary person as the addition is being formed. In a still more recent case from the Colonies, Lord Shaw delivering the judgment of the Privy Council stated that the accretion should be natural and should be slow and gradual, so slow and gradual as to be in a practical sense imperceptible in its course and progress as it occurs. And in another place he said that natural silting up, if gradual and imperceptible, will give the land to the adjoining owner. Attorney-General for Nigeria v. Holt & Co. (7). I do not know if it is necessary to refer to any other case in England as to the meaning of the words 'gradual, slow and imperceptible;' but I may as well refer to a few cases in England where the principle was applied in concrete instances. In Attorney-General v. Chambers (8) the Lord Chancellor, referring at page 69 to the evidence of witnesses for the Crown who said that the alluvial land had not been added to the main land gradually and imperceptibly but rapidly, observed as follows:—"If by the word 'rapidly' the witnesses mean perceptible, then the Crown and not the defendant will be entitled to these accretions, but if the witnesses merely mean that at the expiration of some period of time, they could perceive the changes which had taken place although they could not discern them in their progress then another important question may arise." In Foster v. Wright (9) Justice Lindley, as he then was, said. "The change of the bed' of the river has been gradual and although the river bed is not now where it was, the shifting of the bed has not been perceptible from hour to hour, from day to day, from week to week, nor in fact at all except by comparing its position of late years with its position many years before." A case where it was decided that the accretion was not imperceptible and, therefore, did not belong to the adjoining owner may usefully be referred to, for the purpose of showing in what sense this phrase is understood in England. In Attorney-General v. Reeve (10) the evidence was that the accretion was going on for a long number of years and that it averaged about 30 feet a year. The accretion was perceptible in a month. During the interval between 1878 and the date of the action (which was about five years after) the accretion was 300 feet. There are some instructive observations in the course of the argument. Lord Coleridge in his judgment after referring to the Institutes, Bracton, and Lord Hale's book, and King v. Lord Yarborough (4), Hull and Selby Railway, In re (11) and Attorney-General v. Chambers (8), as to the meaning of the word gradual and imperceptible, said that unless the evidence established that the increase was so insensible that it could not be determined even that the sea was there, the land would not belong to the adjoining owner. And referring to the evidence in that case said, "that this advance of the beach and receding of the line of ordinary high water mark could be plainly perceived from time to time as it went on, that when the wind was blowing strong from north-west to north with a high tide it was often visible from day to day and that the witness had frequently noticed during the prevalence of such winds that the line of

(7) (1915) A. C. 559; 84 L. J. P. C. 98.

(8) (1859) 4 De G. & J. 55; 4 De G. M. & G. 206; 5 Jur (N. S.) 745; 7 W. R. 404; 45 E. R. 22; 124 R. R. 149.

(9) (1879) 4 C. P. D. 438; 49 L. J. C. P. 97; 44 J. P. 7.

(10) (1885) 1 T. L. R. 675.

(11) (1839) 5 M. & W. 327; 8 L. J. Ex. 260; 52 R. R. 738; 151 E. R. 189.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

ordinary high water mark receded some 10 or 12 feet in a single tide." If that test is applied to this case or the test as laid down by the Privy Council in Attorney-General for Nigeria v. Holt & Co., (7), I am afraid it is not possible to say that the accretion was gradual, slow and imperceptible. But in England, they have not such large rivers as we have in India.

The formation of these lankas in the Godaveri was succinctly and accurately described by Mr. Mackenzie in a report made to the High Court in the case of Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari (12), which was finally decided by the Privy Council in Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari (13). The river, which is subject to annual floods, deposits in each season a considerable quantity of silt in certain places thereby forming very large and extensive cultivable soil in the bed of the stream. The flood lasts between June and September, and as soon as the flood subsides the soil newly formed is quite perceptible and is easily distinguishable from the previous existing land. Sometimes of course these formations are made as islands in the midst of the waters and sometimes they are thrown up in contiguity with a pre existing lanka or the mainland. What happens underneath the water of course is imperceptible, but it is difficult to say that the formation is slow or imperceptible in its progress. If we apply, therefore, the test which is applied in England, there can scarcely be any doubt that lankas formed in the Godaveri are not accretions at all, but I doubt whether that is the principle which is applicable in India.

In America where some of the rivers are very large, where also similar formations known as batture are not uncommon, a somewhat different rule is applied. There also the law is stated in terms of the Common Law rule, they also rely on the Institutes of Gaius and Justinian, cite Bracton, Hale and Balckstone and purport to follow the leading decisions in England, but they understand 'imperceptible' as not perceivable in any given moment of time; and even large additions made rapidly by gradual alluvial process are considered accretions to the neighbouring land; but where the increase is sudden or instantaneous it is said it belongs to the sovereign. Of this rule Baron Pollock remarked: "It can hardly be possible that it can be perceptible each moment of time except in the case of a convulsion." Mayor etc. of New Orleans v. United States (14), where the words "slow and imperceptible" is omitted, Hagan v. Campbell (15), St. Clair Co. v. Livingston (16) and note in 58 L. R. A. page 193. In Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. (17) Counsel in argument said that in the cases decided in the Supreme Court the changes were very rapid and yet the doctrine of accretion was enforced in them. I may refer for an application of this doctrine to a case reported as Mulry v. Norton (18).

In India there have been several cases decided by the Privy Council with reference to the law of accretion in Bengal. In one of the early cases in which the question was discussed, Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1), the test laid down was, in the language of the English Law, that the accretion should be gradual, slow and imperceptible and the reason of the law was said to be the necessity of the case and the difficulty of having to determine year by year to whom an inch or a foot or a yard belongs. There have been other cases in which the extent of land claimed was quite large, for instance in Ritraj Kunwar v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (19) where the land in dispute was over 2,000 acres in extent, and in Jaggot Singh v. Brij Nath Kunwar (20), where it was about 4,000 acres in extent. But in these two cases the land which was claimed was identifiable as the land of (12) 5 M. L. J. 244.

(13) 22 M. 464; 1 Bom. L. R. 606; 3 C. W. N. 717; 23 I. A. 107; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 534; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 332 (P. C.), (14) 10 Peters 662; 9 Law. Ed. 573.

(15) 33 Am. Dec. 267 at p. 271; 8 Porter 9.

(16) 23 Wall. 46; 90 U. S. XXIII 59.

(17) 134 U. S. 178; 33 Law. Ed. 872.

(18) 53 Am. Rep. 206; 100 N. Y. 426.

(19) 27 A. 655; 2 A. L. J. 623; 2 C. L. J. 185; 9 C. W. N. 889; 8 O. C. 293; 15 M. L. J. 349; 7 Bom. L. R. 872; 32 I. A. 165; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 873 (P. C.).

(20) 27 C. 768; 27 I. A. 81; 4 C. W. N. 555; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 699; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 502 (P. C.).

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

another person; and it is to be observed that in both the cases the rule that to form an accretion by alluvion the addition must be by gradual, slow and imperceptible means was reiterated [see Ritraj Kunwar v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (19), per Sir Andrew Scoble, and Jaggot Singh v. Brij Nath Kunwar (20), per Lord Robertson]. The learned Advocate-General in one portion of his argument in fact contended that unless the added land is identifiable as the land of another, it belongs to the adjoining owner whether the same was formed gradually or slowly or suddenly or perceptibly, and relied on an extract from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri printed in a note at page 321 of Farnham on Waters. I doubt if the passage supports the Advocate-General's position and in the absence of the full judgment it is impossible to say what was held in that case. If of course everything is an accretion within the meaning of the law which is not identifiable as another man's land, i. e., in all cases where land is formed adherent to another man's land by deposits of sand or soil, however, large or sudden such deposits may be, i. e., in all cases of alluvial deposits, the plaintiff would certainly be entitled to the suit property, for the mud in solution which is precipitated as the waters subside cannot be identified as another man's property; but it seems to me that that is not the law. It is certainly not the law in England, Stephen's Blackstone, Vol. I, page 339, Hindson v. Ashby (21), Attorney-General v. Revere (10), and is contrary to the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Ksoff (22), where their Lordships draw the distinction between mere physical adhesion and accretion or incrementum latens; and as far as I understand it, it does not appear to be the law even in America. Morris v. Brooke (23). It is to be observed that the author Farnham himself states the law in terms of the common law rule and in a very considerable number of cases both in the Supreme Court of the United States and the States there is always a discussion as to the nature of the formation, namely, whether it was gradual or slow. If the only question was whether the land was identifiable as that of another, no question of gradual or slow increase can possibly arise in any case of alluvial deposit. See also Secretary of State v. Kadrikutti (24). In Moharance Sibessury Dabee v. Lukhy Dabee (25) and Tarini Churn Sinha v. Watson & Co. (26) the Calcutta High Court and in the recent case of Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3) the Privy Council had to consider the right of jalkar or fishery. Though it was not necessary for the purpose of these decisions to deal with the law of accretion, as it was held that the right of jalkar did not depend on the ownership of the soil and that the grantee can follow the river, there are valuable observations in them as to the right to the soil as affected by accretion or the converse process of recession. Lord Sumner delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said, that questions of alluvion would depend upon the rapidity of expansion, see page 232; and referring to the change in the course of the river in Watson's case (26), remarked that the change was a sudden one taking place in the case of a single year and not by imperceptible or slow encroachments. On reading these remarks, I am inclined to think that a perceptible addition made in the course of a single year during the annual rise of the river is a sudden increase and is not an accretion to the adjoining riparian land; and if the reason for the rule is as stated in Lopez's case (1), or founded on general security and convenience, as said in Attorney-General for Nigeria v. Holt & Co. (7), I can find no reason for giving the mud and sand deposited in large quantities in the bed of a river, which belongs to the Crown in trust for the public, to the adjoining owner simply because the deposit is also adherent to the adjoining land so long as such deposits are distinguishable from the adjoining land. The principle of identity is I think applicable only to derelict lands or lands exposed by the sudden recession of the sea or change of a river's course. If the principle of identity is to be applied to

(21) (1896) 2 Ch. 1; 65 L. J. Ch. 515; 74 L. T. 327; 45 W. R. 252; 60 J. P. 484.

(22) 10 B. L. R. 406 at p. 421; 18 W. R. 113; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 151 (P. C.).

(23) 53 Am. Rep. 215 foot-note.

(24) 13 M. 369; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 969.

(25) 1 W. R. 88.

(26) 17 C. 963; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1188.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM.

alluvial land, I can find no reason for giving land belonging to one, in this case the Crown, to the neighbouring owner, simply because the river throws a large quantity of mud on it so as to show it above the surface of water.

However that may be, the observations of Lord Sumner, pages 244, 245 of the report, in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3) show that in adopting the law as to alluvion in India we should be guided by local physical conditions. I think the principles laid down in the Bengal Regulation, as observed by the Judicial Committee at Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari (13), afford the best practical guide in applying the law of accretion in the case of such large rivers as the Godavari. Under that Regulation all that is necessary is that the accretion should be by gradual alluvial process; it need not be imperceptible, and it need not be slow. Applying this test to this case, as I have said already, it is not possible to say that the accretion here was not a gradual addition to the land of the plaintiff, though the extent of land added in any particular flood season may be quite perceptible and may easily be ascertainable. In Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari (13) the dispute related to a lanka formed in this very river; the extent of the lanka was about 300 acres which was formed in the course of about three years. Nobody ever suggested that the law of accretion did not apply to that case, though at page 459 their Lordships made some observations showing that an accretion must be by gradual, imperceptible deposits. In H (5), which again related to a lanka formed in the Godavari, the original formation which appears to have come up above the water in a single year (1850) was 370 acres in extent. It was never suggested by the Government or its officers with reference to the disputes in connection with the suit lanka that it was not a gradual formation to which the law of accretion is applicable, till after the present suit was filed. The whole dispute, though it began in 1889, was a boundary dispute with reference to Larminie's line. No claim was made either by the Government or Kota ryots to any land to the west of that line, although the formation was a single whole which was growing by perceptible degrees from year to year. If the formation was not an accretion in the sense of a gradual formation it is really matter for surprise that Government should not have laid claim to the whole of the land and not merely to the eastern portion, as they did till the institution of this suit in 1909. It must be remembered that Mr. Morris, who decided the suit of 1867, referred to the decision of the Privy Council in Doe d. Seebkristo v. East India Company (27) and said that land formed by gradual accretion belongs to the owner of the adjacent soil. There was a survey of the Kotipalli village and the land to the west of Larminie's line, although it formed part of the present suit land, was measured and surveyed as belonging to the plaintiff. That was in 1895. It was said that this was only a river conservancy survey, and even if it was so, its value as evidence is not affected. The dispute again was the subject of a settlement by Mr. (now the Hon'ble Mr. Justice) Spencer in 1896. Then too no question was raised with regard to the right of the plaintiff to this land as an accretion to his original lanka but the only claim made and allowed in favour of the Kota ryots was to the northern portion of the land on the eastern side of Larminie's line. Even this was objected to by the plaintiff when some attempt was made to settle the question under the Boundaries Marks Act. While that matter was pending, there was a survey made of the whole of the zemindari at the request of the zemindar by the Government in 1904. Prior to that date in connection with the dispute proposed to be settled under the Boundaries Marks Act, Mr. Lakshmana Rao, agent of the plaintiff, had already filed plan Exhibit V which showed clearly that the disputed lanka was a very large formation and that the major portion of the lanka which had belonged to the plaintiff had been washed away. Although there was then this dispute between the parties, in the survey of 1904, Exhibit G, a considerable portion of the disputed lanka was measured as belonging to the plaintiff. There again nobody ever suggested that this was not an accretion. Further the immediate cause of this suit was the levy of a so-called penal assessment by the Government and that assessment was with regard to lands east of Larminie's line. There again the Government never suggested that this was not an accretion in the sense of a gradual formation. It is only after the suit was filed with reference to the eastern portion that Government in their written statement for the first time stated that this was not an accretion and it was neither slow nor imperceptible. I am not certain that the Government Pleader argued that the formation was not even gradual, though he no doubt strongly pressed upon us that the whole or at least a large portion of the original formation was in one year and was not, therefore, slow or imperceptible. In these circumstances, more especially as it is possible for the plaintiff to contend, the learned Advocate-General did in fact raise that contention, that owing to the attitude of the Government he had lost evidence which he could have preserved, and in the doubtful state in which the matter is left, namely, whether the present suit land or lanka was originally formed in one particular year, though it was subject to rapid changes by erosions and large additions in subsequent years and if it was, whether it did not begin at the site of the plaintiff's Vutachigaru Lanka, I am not prepared to say that the law of accretion does not apply to this formation. I, therefore, hold, though not without hesitation, that the second point also should be decided in favour of the plaintiff.

(27) 6 M. L. A. 267; 10 Moore P. C. 140; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 540; 19 E. R. 100; 110 R. R. 21.

CHHUNNU LAL v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., DELHI.

It only remains to notice two other points raised by the Government Pleader for the first time in appeal. He contended that as the extent and boundaries of the plaintiff's lankas in the river were accurately ascertainable from the map or plan H 5, any lands subsequently formed even by gradual, slow and imperceptible alluvion in what was the bed of the river in 1870 belonged to the Crown; and relied chiefly on the observations of the Lord Chancellor in Attorney General v. Chambers (8). This question was elaborately considered in Attorney-General v. McCarthy (6) referred to, and the conclusion reached that there was no such principle and the fact that the original boundary was known or ascertainable did not render the law of accretion inapplicable; and the observations of the Privy Council in Attorney-General for Nigeria v. Holt & Co. (7) are to the same effect. The surveys in this case were not within the category of the agri limitati of the Civil Law [St. Clair Co. v. Lovington (16). Hunter's Roman Law, page 276 and 12 L. Q. R. 353 (?)]. This contention must, therefore, be disallowed.

The other point relates to a claim made now for the first time that the Government is in any event entitled to that portion of the land which is a re-formation on the site of the Kotoseri Lanka. No evidence was directed to the question and the Government Pleader relies entirely on his plan, Exhibit XXII, prepared and filed for the purpose of this litigation, to prove that there has been any re-formation at all on the site of the defendant's lanka. We cannot assume that Exhibit XXII is accurate for this purpose and if we allow this contention, it would be necessary to remand an issue for trial to the lower Court. We must decline to do more, especially as the land which the defendant can establish a title to, on this basis, was said to be very small. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

V.R.P.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2339 OF 1916.

April 19, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal

and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

CHHUNNU LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LIMITED,
DELHI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 153—Scheme of composition, when takes effect—Declaration, suit for, that plaintiff's liability on pro-note has ceased—Frame of suit—Appeal—Court-fees on memorandum of appeal—Objection.

Plaintiff had a deposit of Rs. 4,000 in the defendant Bank payable on the 10th October 1914. On the 3rd September 1914 he borrowed Rs. 2,000 at 12 per cent per annum on the security of his deposit and executed a pro-note for the amount. On the 8th October 1914 the Bank suspended payment, and on the 12th and 13th October the plaintiff wrote to the Bank to pay him the balance after deducting Rs. 2,000, and received a reply that as the Bank had stopped business no action could be taken. The Bank started business again on the 1st July 1915 under a scheme sanctioned by the Allahabad High Court, by which debentures and preference shares were to be issued to all "fixed depositors" in lieu of their deposits. The plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration that his liability on the pro-note had come to an end and for an injunction that the Bank be directed to make entries in the books accordingly:

CHHUNNU LAL v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., INDIA.

Held, (1) that the operation of the scheme sanctioned by the High Court did not date back to the time when the Bank suspended payment but that it affected only those persons who were creditors at the time when the sanction was accorded by the Court; [p. 906, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that at the latter date the plaintiff's debt had come to an end and he was a creditor to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and that the arrangement must, therefore, be confined in its operation to his position as a creditor to that extent; [p. 906, col. 2.]

(3) that inasmuch as the Bank wanted the plaintiff to accept the position of a creditor to the extent of Rs. 4,000 and that of a debtor for Rs. 2,000 and the plaintiff repudiated his liability as such, urging that he was a creditor to the extent of Rs. 2,000, and was prepared to accept the terms of the scheme to that extent, no other remedy was open to him to have an adjudication upon his alleged liability as a debtor other than the action for declaration and injunction as brought by him and that he was, therefore, entitled to the relief claimed. [p. 906, col. 2.]

Where on an objection being taken as to the insufficiency of Court-fee on a memorandum of appeal it appeared that the Court-fee was exactly the same as that on the plaint and that the Trial Judge had on an objection by the defendant framed an issue on the point and decided it in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant had accepted the decision and stamped his own appeal in the lower Appellate Court accordingly:

Held, that under the circumstances the objection could not be entertained. [p. 905, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 7th July 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second class, Delhi, dated the 27th April 1916, decreeing the claim.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. E. W. Parker, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The relevant facts of this case are as follows:—The plaintiff Chhunnu Lal had a deposit of Rs. 4,000 in the Bank of Upper India payable on the 10th October 1914. On the 3rd of September 1914 he borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,000 at 12 per cent. per annum on the security of the above deposit and executed a pro-note for the amount. On the 8th October 1914 the Bank suspended payment, and on the 12th and 13th October the plaintiff wrote to the Bank to pay him the balance after deducting Rs. 2,000, and received a reply that, as the Bank had stopped business, no action could be taken in pursuance of the request contained in the letters. It appears that on the 1st July 1915 the Bank started business again under a scheme sanctioned on the 2nd of June by the High Court of Judicature for the North Western Provinces under section 153 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, by which debentures and preference shares were to be issued to all 'fixed depositors' in lieu of their deposits.

The plaintiff's case is that on the 10th October 1914, when the deposit of Rs. 4,000 fell due, his liability on the pro-note came to an end, and that he became a creditor to the extent of the balance. In answer to this case it is contended on behalf of the Bank that the plaintiff is a creditor in respect of the entire amount of Rs. 4,000, that the loan taken by him on the pro-note has not been discharged, and that he is liable to pay the same with interest at the stipulated rate. To obtain an adjudication upon the rights inter se of the parties the plaintiff brought the present action for a declaration that his liability on the pro-note had come to an end, and for an injunction that the defendant Bank be directed to make entries in the books accordingly. The Court of First Instance decreed the claim, but the learned District Judge on appeal accepted the contention of the Bank and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come up to this Court on second appeal, and Mr. Parker for the respondent raises the preliminary objection that the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal is insufficient. Now, the Court fee on the memorandum is exactly the same as that on the plaint, and it appears that the Trial Judge on an objection by the defendant framed an issue on the point and determined it in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant evidently accepted the decision, stamped his own appeal in the lower Appellate Court accordingly, and did not impeach the correctness of the finding before that Court. In these circumstances the preliminary objection cannot be entertained and must be overruled.

CHHUNNU LAL v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., INDIA.

Upon the merits there can be no manner of doubt that on the 10th of October 1914, when the deposit matured, the defendant Bank was not entitled to call upon the plaintiff to pay the debt due on the pro-note, considering that it had already in its possession Rs. 4,000 belonging to the plaintiff and payable to him at once. As observed already the debt was secured on the deposit, and the plaintiff took the further precaution of writing to the Bank to appropriate part of the money, which had become due to him, to the debt due by him on the pro-note. Whether we apply the rule of set-off which finds expression in the Code of Civil Procedure [of which the application to companies in liquidation has been recognised in a Division Bench judgment of this Court reported as Mehr Chand v. Amritsar Bank (1)] or treat the case as one of payment, it is manifest and indeed it is not contested by the defendant, that apart from the scheme sanctioned by the High Court in June 1915, the Bank could not have successfully maintained a suit for the recovery of Rs. 2,000. It is further clear that if the plaintiff had, prior to the enforcement of the scheme in question, brought an action for the balance of the deposit after giving credit for Rs. 2,000, the Bank could not have offered any resistance to that suit and could not have claimed that the debt on the pro note had not been extinguished.

The question then arises whether the scheme or arrangement sanctioned by the High Court altered the jural relations of the parties in such a way as to revive the debt due by the defendant, which debt had to all intents and purposes ceased to exist. It is to be observed that the scheme applies only to the creditors and shareholders of the Bank, and this is clear from section 153 of the Indian Companies Act, which enacts that if a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the creditors, agree to any compromise or arrangement, the compromise or arrangement shall, if sanctioned by the Court, be binding on all the creditors and also on the company. Now, it seems to us that the arrangement could affect only those persons who were creditors at the time when the sanction was accorded by the Court, or at the time when the application under section 153 was presented to the Court (if we apply the analogy of section 168 relating to the date of the commencement of the winding up by the Court). At the latter date the plaintiff's debt had come to an end, and he was a creditor to the extent of only Rs. 2,000, and the arrangement must be confined in its operation to his position as a creditor to that extent. We cannot accept the view that the operation of the scheme dates back to the time when the Bank suspended payment. There is nothing in the Indian Companies Act or in the order of the High Court which would support that contention, and on general principles it is clear that the liability could not be revived by any arrangement which came into operation subsequently. Whether the plaintiff is to be treated as a fixed depositor or a creditor of any other description is a matter which is not directly before us, and we are not called upon to pronounce any opinion thereupon.

As to the form of the suit, a perusal of the correspondence between the parties leaves no doubt that the Bank wanted the plaintiff to accept the position of a creditor in respect of Rs. 4,000 and that of a debtor for Rs. 2,000 and that the plaintiff wholly repudiated his liability as such. He maintained that he was a creditor to the extent of Rs. 2,000, and if he is to that extent prepared to accept the terms of the scheme, it is manifest that no remedy is open to him to have an adjudication upon his alleged liability as a debtor other than the action for declaration and injunction as brought by him. Indeed, the learned Advocate for the Bank is unable to suggest any other form of action or any other relief to which the plaintiff was entitled and which he has not claimed in the suit. We accordingly agree with the Subordinate Judge that no valid objection can be taken to the frame of the suit.

For the foregoing reasons we accept the appeal and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of First Instance with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

(1) 28 Ind. Cas. 975; 69 P. W. R. 1915; 59 P. L. R. 1915; 63 P. R. 1915.

KUNTI DAI v. JHARU LAL DAS.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 53 TO 58
OF 1916.

May 22, 1917.

Present:—Sir Edward Chamier, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Mullick.

KUNTI DAI—APPELLANT

versus

JHARU LAL DAS MAZUMDAR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Part I, Art. 3, applicability of—Possession, suit for, by tenant
—Dispossession by landlord, not as such—Limitation.*

Per Chamier, C. J.—Article 3, Sch. III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, applies only to a suit by a raiyat or under-raiyat against his landlord, including one or more of several landlords. If it is shown that the plaintiff raiyat is in fact a tenant of the defendant who dispossessed him in respect of the land claimed in the suit, the Article will apply. The reason or excuse given or supposed to have been given by the landlord for dispossessing his tenant appears to have no bearing on the enactment. [p. 907, col. 1.]

Per Mullick, J.—Whether the plaintiff admits the defendant to be his landlord or not or the defendant admits that the plaintiff is his raiyat or not, if in fact the relationship of landlord and tenant is found to exist then Article 3, Schedule III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, will apply. [p. 909, col. 1.]

The policy of the Legislature since 1885 is to rigorously exclude all other Statutes of Limitation whenever it is possible to apply the special limitation provided by the Rent Acts. [p. 909, col. 2.]

Where a co-sharer landlord dispossessed a raiyat claiming the land as his zerait and in a suit for recovery of possession by the tenant brought more than two years after the date of dispossession it was found as a matter of fact that the land was really the kast of the tenant:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, even though when dispossessing the tenant the landlord did not purport to act as landlord of the holding. [p. 908, col. 1; p. 909, col. 1.]

Kamal Dhari Thakur v. Rameshwar Singh, 19 Ind.
Cas. 545; 17 C. W. N. 817; *Abhoy Churn Mookerjee
v. Shaik Titu*, 2 C. W. N. 175; *Brojo Kishore Mahapatra
v. Saraswati Dassi*, 6 C. W. N. 333; *Mahomed Khalil
v. Hirendra Nath Bhattacharya*, 5 C. L. J. 650, commented upon and distinguished.

Letters Patent Appeals from decisions of
Mr. Justice Atkinson, in Second Appeals Nos.
1400 to 1425, dated the 16th May 1916, reversing the decisions of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 10th February 1912, modifying those of the Munsif, Bhagalpur, dated the 2nd May, 1911.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, Lalit Mohan Ghosh, and Ganga Dhar Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. R. Das and Sailendra Nath Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—These six appeals arise out of three suits brought by the respondents for possession of nine plots of land in villages Karharia, Bhooria, Mohiama and Salondha appertaining to Touzi No. 96, Pargana and District Bhagalpur. The respondents had in this zemindari a small share which passed at an execution sale in 1902 to one Srimati Jai Mangalbatti Misra, who died since these suits were instituted and is represented before us by the appellant.
For the sake of convenience I will treat the purchaser as the appellant and refer to her as such. It was found by the Court of First Appeal that the respondents were prior to the sale in possession of the nine plots in question in these appeals as raiyats and that they remained in possession of the plots till 1907, when they were dispossessed by the appellant. It appears that in settlement proceedings in 1906 the appellant claimed the nine plots as her kamat lands. The Settlement Authorities rejected her claim, but wrongly, as it has now been found, recorded the plots as bakast malik. The appellant dispossessed the respondents of the plots in Salondha and Karharia in August and September 1907 and of the plots in Bhooria and Mahiama in October and November 1907.
The present suits were instituted on November 15th, 1909, on the re-opening of the Courts after the annual vacation of one month. The Court of First Appeal allowed the claims to the plots in Bhooria and Mahiama but dismissed the claims to the plots in Salondha and Karharia on the ground that they were barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III, to the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both sides appealed and a learned Judge of this Court held that both sets of claims were within time. Hence these six appeals by the defendant or rather by her representative.

It was conceded before us that Appeals
Nos. 55, 57, and 58 must be dismissed on the finding of the Court of First Appeal that the suits were brought within two years of the date on which the respondents were dispossessed of the plots in Bhooria and Mahiama.

KUNTI DAI v. JHARU LAL DAS.

The question for decision in the remaining three appeals, which relate to the plots in Karharia and Salondha, is whether the suits are governed by Article 3, Schedule III, to the Bengal Tenancy Act. That Article provides that the period of limitation for a suit "to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as a raiyat or an under-raiyat" shall be two years from "the date of dispossession." It has been held in a large number of cases that Article 3 applies only to a suit by a raiyat or under-raiyat against his landlord, including one or more of several landlords. I accept that construction of the Article. So far it would appear that these suits are governed by this Article. But it is contended on behalf of the appellant that the Article applies only where the raiyat has been dispossessed by his landlord acting as such. In fact the argument went to this length that the Article applies only when the landlord says either expressly or impliedly to the raiyat, "I am your landlord, you are my tenant. You must vacate the land", and then turns the raiyat out wrongfully. If this contention is correct, Article 3 does not apply to the present cases for, although on the findings the appellant was one of the landlords of the respondents, she did not claim the plots in question as the landlord of any one and certainly did not admit that the respondents were or ever had been her tenants in respect of the plots. She claimed that the plots were her kamat land by reason of the fact that she had purchased the share to which according to her they were appurtenant or attached. I am not prepared to place such a narrow construction on Article 3. It appears to me that if it is shown that the plaintiff raiyat is in fact a tenant of the defendant who dispossessed him, in respect of the land claimed in the suit, then Article 3 applies to the suit. The object of that Article seems to be to provide a short period of limitation for a suit by a raiyat to recover a holding from which he has been dispossessed by his landlord. The reason or excuse, good, bad, or indifferent, given or supposed to have been given by the landlord for dispossessing his tenant appears to have no bearing on the enactment and much confusion must ensue if the applicability of the enactment is made to depend upon such considerations.

It has been held in several cases in the Calcutta High Court that where a landlord buys a raiyat's holding and as purchaser of the raiyati interest dispossesses that or another raiyat, Article 3 does not apply to a suit by the dispossessed raiyat to recover his holding [see Kamal Dhari Thakur v. Rameshwar Singh (1) and cases there cited] and some of the language used in the judgments in those cases supports the contention of the respondents in the cases now before us. But the actual decisions in those cases do not cover the present cases and I am not prepared to extend those decisions to the present cases.

In my opinion Article 3 applies to the cases now before us. I would allow Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 53, 54 and 56 and dismiss with costs of both hearings in this Court Second Appeals Nos. 1400, 2671 and 2672 of 1912. Letters Patent appeals Nos. 55, 57 and 58 should be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—I entirely concur with the judgment that has just been delivered. The period of one year allowed under section 20 of Act X of 1859 was extended by Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 to two years and up to 1885 the law was understood to be that for actions in the nature of possessory suits between parties who are admitted to be landlord and tenant the period of limitation was two years, but that when the title of one party or the other was denied then the period was 12 years under the general law. Act VIII of 1885, however, effected a change and upon the analogy of the Central Provinces Rent Code enacted that an occupancy raiyat claiming to recover possession against his landlord must bring his suit within two years of the dispossession. It was held that this applied not only to possessory suits but also to suits where the title of the parties was challenged [see Saraswati Dasi v. Horitarun Chuckerbutti (2) and Ramadhan Bhadro v. Ramkumar Dey (3)]. The law was further amended in 1907 by

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 545; 17 C. W. N. 817.

(2) 16 C. 741; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 490.

(3) 17 C. 926; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1162.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

bringing within the rule *raiya*s of all descriptions and under-raiya's, so that the law as I now understand it to be is that whether the plaintiff admits the defendant to be his landlord or not or the defendant admits that the plaintiff is his *raiya*t or not, if in fact the relationship of landlord and tenant is found to exist, then Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply. With regard to that class of cases which have sought to exclude from the operation of Schedule III ouster by a landlord acting under the authority of a Civil Court decree and in the capacity of an auction-purchaser, the principle on which they may be distinguished is that the facts in each of those cases show that the tenancy was at an end and that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant at the time of the ouster.

In my opinion all the cases on which the learned Counsel for the respondents has relied are susceptible of this distinction for instance in Abhay Churn Mookerjee v. Shaik Titu (4) the defendants were co-sharer landlords who had in execution of a rent decree purchased the jotes of the plaintiffs; in Brojo Kishore Mahapatra v. Saraswati Dassi (5) the landlords had purchased the interest of the tenant plaintiff in execution either of a rent or a simple money decree, in Mahomed Khalil v. Hirendra Nath Bhattacharyy (6) the landlord was a purchaser in execution of a rent decree against the recorded tenant; and finally in Kamal Dhari Thakur v. Rameshwar Singh (1) the landlord defendant No. 1 had purchased in execution of a decree for rent and settled the holding with respondent No. 2.

In these cases the Court was possibly of opinion that the tenancy being at an end by the operation of a decree and delivery of possession, the plaintiffs would not have been suing as *raiya*s.

But in the cases before us the facts show that notwithstanding the denial of the landlords the tenancy did exist at the time of the ouster and, therefore, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act clearly applies. It is immaterial in my opinion that the landlords put their case too high at the outset in claiming that the lands were *zerai*s and that no rights of tenancy could exist therein.

To hold otherwise would in my opinion be reading into Article 3 words that are not contained in the Statute.

On general grounds also I would hold that the policy of the Legislature since 1885 is to rigorously exclude all other Statutes of Limitation whenever it is possible to apply the special limitation provided by the Rent Acts. So it has been held that in districts where Act X of 1859 still applies, a *raiya*t who has been illegally ejected by his landlord must sue to recover possession within 1 year under sections 25 and 30 of the Act and is precluded from proceeding under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act in the Civil Court, Jumla Singh v. E. G. Kingsley (7).

Appeals Nos. 53, 54, 56 decreed;

Appeals Nos. 55, 57, 58 dismissed.

(7) 21 Ind. Cas. 224; 17 C. W. N. 1201.

— —

MADRAS HIGH COURT. FULL BENCH.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 210 OF 1911.

February 17, 1916.

Present: - Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice, Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt., and Mr.
Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

SESHACHALA CHETTY AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 AND 3 TO 6—APPELLANTS
versus

PARA CHINNASAMI AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14 AND 15—RESPONDENTS.

Mirasi rights, nature of—Gramanattam, rights in—Poramboke lands, rights of mirasidars in—Grant of house-site by Government in mirasi village—Ejectment of tenants in occupation of house-site, suit for, by mirasidar.

Per Wallis, C. J.—In the absence of evidence of user there is no general presumption of the mirasidars' ownership of the nattam, but where user is shown the presumption of ownership readily arises. [p. 940, col. 2.]

The preferential right of the mirasidars to cultivable waste is not of itself a sufficient foundation for the general proposition that they are entitled to eject inhabitants of the village from portions of the unoccupied nattam granted to them by Government, though they may be entitled, as incidental to such right of preferential cultivation, to the allotment of sites on the unoccupied nattam, when necessary. [p. 940, col. 2.]

(4) 2 C. W. N. 175.

(5) 6 C. W. N. 333.

(6) 5 C. L. J. 650.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Before the advent of British rule and especially under the Muhammadan Government, unoccupied nattam was not generally recognised by Government as the private property of the mirasidars, nor has the latter's ownership been established subsequently either by Government recognition or by judicial decisions. [p. 940, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Ayling, J.—Where in a mirasi village a person has been granted a portion of the nattam poramboke for use as house-site by a duly authorised Government officer, the mirasidar cannot by virtue of any right, privilege or title inherent in him as mirasidar disregard the grant of the house-site by such officer, and evict the grantee from possession. [p. 954, col. 1.]

This rule does not apply to cases in which a mirasidar has, prior to the grant by Government, already acquired a title to the particular site either by previous grant or prescription, and sues on such title. [p. 954, col. 1.]

The mirasidars of a particular village are not precluded from showing, if they can, that in that village they have acquired by prescription a title in the nattam generally as against Government, which would include the right claimed. But the mere fact that they are the mirasidars of the village neither carries with it such a right, nor does it even raise a presumption of the existence of such a right. [p. 954, col. 1.]

The incidents attaching to mirasi tenure may have a common origin in the status of the mirasidar, but none of them necessarily involves another, and they vary with the description of land to which they relate. Each requires to be separately established, and recognition by the State, whether express or implied, is an indispensable condition for the enforcement of each. [p. 942 col. 1.]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—In a mirasi village the rights of Government over waste (including nattam and cheri) are subject to the rights of the mirasidars. [p. 975, col. 1.]

The nature and extent of such rights are not uniform throughout the Presidency but vary, and the onus is on the mirasidars to prove that any specified incidents attach to mirasi rights in any particular district, there being no presumption that gramanattam is the exclusive property of the mirasidars. [p. 975, cols. 1 & 2.]

The rights of mirasidars over waste are not extinguished by the mere fact that the Government grants pattas to strangers. [p. 975, col. 2.]

Per Sankaran Nair, J. (in Order of Reference).—A mirasidar, so far as the Government is concerned, is the proprietor of the waste lands in the village. But he has not the right to convert immemorial waste, i. e., anadi karambu into cultivable land, without the consent of Government or of the non-mirasidars of the village. Whatever may be the rights of the mirasidars, the Government is not entitled to deal with immemorial waste or introduce other pattadars. [p. 925, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 245 of 1908, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Poonamallee, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1905.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 4th December 1912 and the 27th and 28th August 1913, and having stood over for consideration till the 9th October 1913, the Court (Sankaran Nair and Sadasiva Aiyer, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The question that arises for decision in second appeal has reference to the respective rights of the Government and the mirasidars in the waste lands, including house sites, in a mirasi village.

In the old village accounts and in the discussion on the question these lands are referred to under certain designations:—

Poramboke.—Includes the nattam cheri, i. e., the residential quarters of the village, rivers, tanks, water courses, waters, roads, burning places.

Tarisu.—Waste, is of two kinds; seykal karambu—cultivable waste; anadi karambu—immemorial waste.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs who claim as mirasidars owning two shares out of three in a village in the Chingleput District. They say that the land in dispute, which is a homestead, is their ancestral property held under them by the 13th defendant. They allege trespass on their land and seek to recover possession of it. On the allegations made by the defendants, persons in possession, that they held under Government, the Secretary of State was made the 15th defendant. In the written statement the Government admitted that the land forms part of the gramanattam, but contended that neither the plaintiffs nor their predecessors, who are the mirasidars of the village, have any proprietary right to the gramanattam and other poramboke lands in Government villages, and that they vest in the Government. On this the issue was framed, "whether the mirasidars of the plaintiff village have proprietary right in village sites and other poramboke lands?" Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. This is an appeal from that decision. The lower Courts were of opinion that the claims of the mirasidars to waste lands have been finally negatived and the Government's title established by the judgments in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Ohari (1) and

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), and they accordingly considered only the question whether the plaintiffs have established a title by prescription against Government. They found the following facts proved. The plaintiffs purchased their mirasi property under Exhibit J, dated the 28th May 1891, from a previous mirasidar. The title deed conveyed to them the entire property in the land conveyed. It conveyed in terms the village site, cheri site, as well as wells, tank, pond, river channel, waste lands and all other rights and privileges pertaining thereto. Their predecessor purchased the property under Exhibit H (1887), which also conveyed all the waste lands, etc. Exhibit H makes reference to a deed of partition of 1853 and a prior document of July 1822 as title-deeds. The deed of partition was produced in Court, but as it was not produced at the proper time the Judges rejected it. The lower Courts attached no weight to Exhibits H and J, as the Government was not a party to them. It is also proved that in 1894 the land was actually cultivated under the plaintiffs. The lower Courts did not attach any weight to this circumstance, as at that time there was an application before the Collector by a Christian missionary for lands in the mirasi village and this cultivation was treated simply as an attempt to create evidence of enjoyment. But this fact does not deprive it of its value and shows that the plaintiffs did exercise an act of possession at that time when their title was disputed. Again, in 1902 the plaintiffs let a tenant (plaintiffs' witness No. 3) into possession. This was after the grant to the defendants by the Government. A thatched hut was put up for supplying liquor to the Pariahs residing there. Exhibits E and G no doubt cannot be treated as evidence of title in these circumstances, but these seem to be certainly evidence of possession. It is also found that the plaintiffs cut branches of trees. This also is explained on the ground that it does not amount to an act of ownership but that it is a common privilege of mirasidars. There is no counter-evidence of possession or of title. Now, it seems clear on these facts that, though they might not be sufficient to support a title by prescription only, if the mirasidars are the owners of the lands including the waste in their village, they have proved such possession as the nature of the land admits of, and prima facie, therefore, they would be entitled to recover.

But it is argued that the mirasidars of a village have no right in waste lands or in the homestead, nattams or cheries included in the limits of the village. They might have certain privileges, but such privileges are put an end to when the Government interferes with the possession of such land. This is the plea that is upheld by the lower Courts and that is the question which arises for consideration in second appeal. The right that is claimed is on behalf of the village community, that is, of the mirasidars, as a body, each mirasidar having a share in the village. In determining this question, it is first necessary to bear in mind that a village was not a mere administrative unit.

We have now got ample informations about the village community in Mr. Huddleston's Mirasi Papers (an abstract of it is given by Mr. Baden Powell in his Indian Village Community, pages 361 to 379), in the correspondence relating to the revision of village establishments, both official publications, and in the volumes of South Indian Inscriptions with reports, also being published by Government.

The following facts appear so far as the Tamil land is concerned. The country was divided into villages. A village, geographically considered, was a tract of country comprising some hundreds or thousands of acres of arable and waste lands; politically viewed, it resembled a corporation or township. It had its nattam plots of land set apart for house sites for caste Hindus, cheries for the labouring classes, and also portions set apart for other castes. It had its own officers or servants to collect the revenue payable to Government, to repress crime, to guard the crops, to preserve the boundaries, and the superintendent of the tanks and water courses to distribute the water therefrom for the purposes of agriculture. "Under this simple form of Municipal Government the inhabitants of the country have lived from time immemorial. The boundaries of the villages have been seldom altered and, though the villages themselves have been sometimes injured, and even desolated by war, famine and disease, the same name, the same limits, the same interests, the same families have continued for ages. The inhabitants give themselves no trouble about the breaking up and division of kingdoms, whole villages remain entire, they care not to what power it is transferred or to what sovereign it devolves; its internal economy remains unchanged." This description, taken from the fifth Report of the Committee of the House of Commons, has become classic and is a true description of a typical village in southern India when the East India Company acquired it.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The ancient deeds of transfer of which we have copies fully bear out, like Exhibits H and J, the title of the members of the village community or mirasidars to the lands in the village. Many documents are published in the papers on the mirasi right with notes by Mr. Bayley and Mr. Huddleston. In one deed, copy of which is printed at page 263, "the uncultivated land within the limits of our village" is granted by the mirasidars for being brought under cultivation. Manai, which means house site or nattam, kollai, which means homestead, and which is a small enclosure near the house, paracheri or the suburbs set apart for Pariahs, pizhakkadai (the backyard immediately adjoining the house), maradai maravadai, meaning all kinds of game and wood land, all these are expressly granted. The notes by the experienced Revenue Officer who edited those papers and explained these terms are very instructive—see pages 262 to 342. Some of these were executed shortly before the East India Company acquired the government of the country but others were later. The deeds in the book on mirasi papers are confined to Madras and its suburbs. But the inscriptions which are now being published show that elsewhere in the Presidency it was the same. The volumes of South Indian Inscriptions supply ample information on the point. I will only refer to one or two by way of illustration. In the inscription which is printed at page 115 of Volume 2, part II, of the South Indian Inscriptions, we find among the properties sold the village site (gramanattam), the place used for the pasture of the cows (gopracharabhumi), vellannattam, the land which includes the land of the cultivator, ponds, channels hills, jungles and mounts; and the extent, according to the survey of these items, is given. It gives the trees over-ground and the wells under-ground with rights of alienation. In another grant we have cornatham (village site), kulam (pond), vaikkal (channel passing through the villages), the paracheri, kammalacheri and burning ground (chudukadu). I have selected these two inscriptions at random out of a mass of inscriptions which are printed in these volumes, which go to tell the same story, i.e., in ancient days the grant conveyed the entire property in the village of every kind and form. These title-deeds, published in the Mirasi papers, and the deeds that come frequently before the Courts, refer to the eight incidents of ownership which are conveyed by them. They are explained in the Mirasi papers at page 205. Pashana, one of these eight incidents conveyed, means mountains, rocks and their contents, i.e., mines and minerals and has always been understood to show that even waste lands were conveyed. See Sheristadar Sankarayya on this point at page 221. Some of these grants were made by the Rajahs themselves. Whenever the King wanted to bestow waste lands or any extent of land within the limits of a village, he purchased them from the mirasidars; otherwise, the donee obtained only the Government share. Sheristadar Sankarayya states that this has been the practice in the Shozha country in the villages of Needamangalam, Callanei and many others. See Mirasi Papers, page 220. The Inam Commissioner, whose proceedings form an enclosure to G. O. No. 2346 Revenue, dated the 23rd December 1861, stated that in Tanjore "when the Rajahs of the country granted waste lands in inam, they generally purchased or obtained in gift the mirasi right of the lands from the mirasidars and conferred it on the inamdars. Another arrangement sometimes made with the same object was to confer a portion of the inam on the mirasidars of the village in compensation for their rights over the waste land which was given in inam. This was done either by grants or subsequently by the grantees." This report is of special importance as it was made with a view to obtain the order of the Government as to how such lands are to be dealt with. This seems decisive. So far the documentary evidence.

But after a century of British Government,

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

these ancient deeds can only be relied upon to explain and support the rights of the village communities, where they have succeeded in preserving their rights. When the East India Company took possession of the country, the village communities were in a state of disintegration. Some villages were held as joint property, the entire produce being divided among the mirasidars in certain defined shares. In some other villages, all the lands under cultivation were divided, but the waste lands, etc., were held as common property. In certain other villages, the lands under cultivation and some arable waste were divided and the rest of the lands were held in common. The ryotwari settlement, which was introduced by the East India Company, was practically destructive of this communal holding of property. The Government as far as possible entered into direct relations with the individual proprietors. Pattas were issued to each ryot and the land which the pattadar was to cultivate in the ensuing year was entered therein, and if he was unwilling to cultivate any land, he had to surrender it to the Government. Again, the policy of the Government was to enter into direct relations with the actual cultivator. The rights of the mirasidar, therefore, as a middleman were recognised as little as possible. The village autonomy was thus destroyed. The old boundaries were lost; many villages were often clubbed into one. The old hereditary village officials became, or gave place to new, Government servants. The oppressive character of the revenue assessments in the early years of the last century, the comparative frequency of famines and seasons of scarcity led to the abandonment of villages. Consequently, it is now difficult to say whether there is any presumption of mirasi rights in any district or to what extent the village community have succeeded in preserving their rights. They survived, generally speaking, in those districts, Chingleput and Tanjore in particular, in which the Collectors respected ancient native rights, though from other districts also cases often come before the Courts in which the village community have successfully asserted their claims. The presumption will also vary with the kind of waste in dispute. I shall briefly refer to the recognised authorities. Mr. Ellis, who was a Collector whose opinion is referred to always with respect on this point, recognised the full ownership of the mirasidars in the lands of the village. According to him, when they cultivated the lands themselves, they paid the Government revenue. When any non-mirasidar cultivated, he paid Tunduvaram to the mirasidar. From him all the mirasidars received also certain fees. He was of opinion that the mirasi right also extended to waste. He distinguished between culturable waste land, that might be brought under cultivation, and immemorial waste, see page 184. He said that the mirasidars had as much right in the culturable waste as they had in the lands under cultivation paying revenue to Government. They might cultivate it or cut wood, but in the case of immemorial waste, though they had the right of cutting wood, grazing their cattle and quarrying, they had no right of cultivation and could not break up the pasturage or cut down productive trees without the consent of the Government. He also pointed out that mirasi right was saleable (when he wrote) and that such sales were of shares in the villages, Mirasi Papers, pages 205, 207. This was also the opinion of Sankarayya, who was for many years sheristadar in the Huzur Kutchery at Madras. Mr. Ellis was also of opinion that, if the mirasidars declined to take up culturable waste for cultivation or failed to make any arrangements for it, it was open to the Circar to give it to strangers for cultivation, though the mirasi right would not be thereby extinguished. The mirasidar would be entitled after any lapse of time to claim those lands himself. The other District Officers who were consulted agreed generally with these opinions, though there were differences between them in detail. The opinion of Mr. Ellis was first accepted by the Government of Madras and the Board of Revenue and was printed and circulated for the use of the service at large, see Mirasi Papers, page 344; but Sir Thomas Munro, who became the Governor of Madras afterwards, disagreed with it, and he recorded his opinion in his minute of the 31st December 1824, and in all the subsequent discussions the question has generally assumed the form, which of them is more reliable. Sir Thomas Munro wrote that the view taken by Mr. Ellis and others, that the mirasi- dar of wet land was bound to pay rent only for what he cultivated, is wrong, and that, if he left any land uncultivated and the Government gave the land to another person for cultivation, the mirasidar had no right to exact from him the landlord's share or rent, though the mirasidar might have still the privilege for a long, though not clearly defined, term of years of recovering his land from the Government tenant on consenting to pay the rent. As regards the waste lands, he stated:

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

"The waste in miras villages in Arcot is supposed by Mr. Ellis to belong to the mirasidar jointly; and he supports his opinion by documents showing that, when a mirasidar sells his cultivated lands, he transfers by the same deed to the purchaser his right in the produce of the waste, the quarries, mines, fisheries, etc., within the limits of the village. But this appears to be a mere technical form, which can give no actual proprietary right in the waste. It is used in villages where there is no waste, as well as where there is, and may be used where there is no miras. It confers a right, but not the right of ownership, to the pasture of the waste lands, and the fishery of the tanks and nullahs, in common with the other mirasidars of the village. The same right exists everywhere. In those parts of the Deccan where miras is unknown, the ryots of every village reserve the fishery and pasture to themselves, and drive away the cattle of strangers, and derive just as much benefit from the waste as those of miras villages. Such a right seems to be a natural one everywhere, and it is accordingly assumed by the ryots of every village without its being supposed that any formal grant is necessary for the purpose." He added afterwards: "It has been supposed that in miras villages in Arcot, in the original compact between the Circar and the first settlers, the exclusive use of the waste was secured to those settlers: but it has already been shown that in all villages, whether miras, or not, the inhabitants reserve to themselves the exclusive use of the waste. But this right is good only against strangers, not against the Circar, which possesses, I think, by the usage of the country, the absolute right of disposing of the waste as it pleases, in villages which are miras as well as in those which are not."

Sir Thomas Munro is, no doubt, right

in saying that the mere fact that the deeds of conveyance referred to the waste, quarries, mines and fisheries would not convey any title if the vendor was not entitled to them, but, where it is accompanied by the exercise of rights of ownership, then they form strong evidence of title. It is stated in the same extract that the ryots of every village reserved the rights of pasture and fishery to themselves; the right of exclusive enjoyment is, of course, one of the main incidents of ownership. Again Mr. Ellis states that the mirasidar used to exercise the right of quarrying. This is almost a conclusive test of ownership. Other acts of ownership will be referred to later. Sir Thomas Munro states, no doubt, that certain rights referred to by him were exercised and these deeds of conveyance executed in this form, not only by the mirasidars but also by those village communities where no mirasi right prevailed. That only shows that, after the village communities in non-mirasi villages lost certain rights, they still retained others with that form of conveyance; but, in so far as any rights have been asserted and exercised, these deeds support the view that they were based upon ancient usage. Sir Thomas Munro also says: "The Circar from ancient times has everywhere, even in Arcot as well as in other Provinces, granted waste in inam free of every rent or claim, public or private, and appears in all such grants to have considered the waste as being exclusively its own property." It is undoubtedly the fact that there are many ancient grants by rulers conveying waste in inam, etc., and they show prima facie that the waste was Government property at the time of the grant. A large number will be found in the South Indian Inscriptions and a few in the Mirasi Papers. But Sir Thomas Munro seems to have been unaware of the fact that, when in ancient times the Circar granted waste in inam free of every rent or claim generally, it was after purchasing the property from the mirasidar. We cannot ignore the statements on this point of Sankarayya or the Inam Commissioner, to which I have referred. This suggests an inference, as I have pointed out, exactly contrary to that drawn by Munro. Further the fact that Government granted the waste lands to village communities, shows not only the title of the latter to the waste lands but raises a presumption of a lost grant in every case of village community in possession of waste. So, if I had to form an opinion as between Sir Thomas Munro and Mr. Ellis at this distance of time, I should hesitate very much to accept his (Sir Thomas Munro's) view in opposition to that of Mr. Ellis and the other District Officers. But it appears to me that the question is concluded by authority, and that Sir Thomas Munro's view has been considered and authoritatively rejected by the Civil Courts and also by the Government. His opinion was recorded in 1824. The question soon came up for consideration before the Civil Court. As between the Government and the mirasidars, the nature of the mirasi right was considered in Cause No. 90 of 1836 in the Zillah Court of Chingleput and in appeal from that decision. The plaintiffs therein claimed to be the mirasidars of the village, and their case was that there were 164 and odd cawnies of uncultivated land in the village, out of which the Collector, the 1st defendant, granted under a cowle to the plaintiffs 40 cawnies, and by another cowle to others, who did not belong to the village, 80 cawnies. The plaintiffs, being unwilling that persons who had no mirasi in the village should have possession of any part of the waste land, offered to take the whole of the 164 and odd cawnies and give security for the revenue. The Collector, however, refused to do so and gave a portion of the land to the seventh and other defendants. The plaintiffs denied the right of the Collector to give away such land. The Collector contended that the land was waste, and that he had the power of granting cowle to any person who was willing to undertake to bring it under cultivation. On this question, this is the finding of the Judge:—

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

"From the evidence in this case, it is quite evident that the plaintiffs alone are the mirasidars, and that the 7th defendant and others have no mirasi right whatever in the village. That the mirasidars alone have a right to sell and mortgage varapat land, and that to every mirasi share there is a certain portion of waste land attached, but the particular parts of the waste land which belong to each individual mirasi share is not actually known because those waste lands are seldom if ever divided, are facts which have been established by the evidence of witnesses in numberless cases before this Court; and as no one ever attempted to dispute the inherent right of mirasidars to the waste land, it is evident that, without the consent of the proprietors of the soil, the Collector has no authority to deliver any part of these lands to other persons." Papers on Mirasi Right, page 461.

There was an appeal from that decree to the Provincial Court, and the Collector relied, amongst other grounds, on the opinion of Sir Thomas Munro, already referred to, that "the right of the mirasidars to the waste was good only so far as to preclude strangers from grazing and exercising other rights of common in the village, but that the Circar possessed by the usage, of the country, the absolute right of disposing of the waste as it pleases in villages which are mirasi, as well as in those which are not." See page 465, Mirasi Papers. The Appellate Court upheld the right of the mirasidars to the village waste. The following is the material portion of the judgment. See pages 466-467:—

"The first point which calls for notice in the argument of the appellant, is the objection taken to that part of the Zillah Judge's decree which asserts that 'the right of the mirasidars to the immemorial waste lands has never been disputed;' this averment of the Zillah Judge appears in entire accordance with the law of mirasi as laid down by Mr. Ellis, while the contrary position of the appellant that in fact 'the immemorial waste is the absolute property of the Circar', is not only incompatible with his views, but also incompatible with the possession on the part of the mirasidar of any property in the soil whatever. Mr. Ellis says: 'Mirasi right, wherever it exists, certainly extends to waste lands.' 'In the anadi karambu or immemorial waste though the mirasidars possess the exclusive right of cutting firewood, working quarries etc., they have no right of cultivation, much less can they claim to break up common used for pasturage, or to cut down productive trees, etc.' 'Mirasi right is confined to the use of these as they exist; no alteration can be made with respect to them by the mirasidar. I mean that they have no inherent right to do so. With the consent of the Circar, any beneficial change in the appropriation of lands may take place, and a correspondent alteration may be made in the Tarapadi accounts; thus, if part of the anadi karambu lands be reclaimed, or a road in the poramboks be stopped up and cultivated, the extent must be transferred from this head to that of varapat (varapat lands under wet cultivation paying revenue). The restriction contained in the foregoing has no reference whatever to a limitation of right (as property), but to the power of its conversion except for beneficial purposes, the Government having a voice in the case of such conversion, being equally interested as the mirasidars in its effects. If a mirasidar be so reduced in circumstances as not to be able to bring under cultivation his share of the varapat, or if he should have abandoned agriculture for other pursuits, it is incumbent on him to provide for its culture by granting to payakaries such terms as will induce them to bestow on it the advantages of their stock and labours. If he do not do so the State has then a right to employ payakaries either for the current year, or for a fixed, not an indefinite, number of years, and perhaps to resume his mirasi swatantrams in proportion to the extent of land he has neglected to cultivate. The mirasi tenure seems almost indefeasible, every possible allowance and expedient having been in practice to prevent its alienation from the original possessor. B. Sankarayya, whose views of mirasi are recorded with those of Mr. Ellis, says, 'As waste lands are included in the gramanattam, all such lands have been considered to appertain exclusively to the mirasidars.' The same authority, speaking of the right of the Circar to provide for the revenue where the mirasidar makes default, says, 'If, therefore, the mirasidars fail to cultivate, and loss thence accrues to the State, the Circar enjoys and exercises the right to cause the lands to be cultivated and to issue coules for the purpose'. 'Although many authorities concur on this point, I have not met with one which vests in the Circar power over mirasi lands further than is necessary for the temporary protection of the revenue, in default of its being provided through the means of the mirasidar; nor have I found any authority which distinguishes the right over waste (as property) and cultivable land, except in the purpose of their respective application. Every village has a certain portion of waste land attached to it, which neither the mirasidar nor the Government can break up unless for mutual benefit. Mirasi is founded on immemorial usage, from which neither the Government nor the ryot has power to depart in any respect unless for a beneficial change.' pages 466, 467, Papers on Mirasi Right" and the conclusions are stated in the following terms: 'The document granted by the Collector and which is denominated a coule, is an entire annihilation of the right of the plaintiffs. It conveys the lands in perpetuity to payakaries without respect to the mirasidar's claim; it assumes the right of soil to be in the Government, instead of the mirasidar; and it does not even recognise mirasi as a distinction, much less its claims. The circumstances which would have justified even temporary alienation of the land by the Collector to the payakaries, are all wanting in the case. The act was not necessary as a protection of the revenue, as the plaintiffs offered security for its full payment whether they cultivated the land or not. Their offer (Document No. 50) is dated 20th May 1835, the coule to the 7th and 9th defendants is dated 15th June of the same year. If the waste in question were convertible into cultivable land, it is quite clear from the authorities quoted that, on its conversion from the anadi karambu to varapat, it ought to have been entered as such, in the Tarapadi accounts of the village, and then divided among the mirasidars according to the manner in which the rest of the village was shared among them."

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I have referred to this judgment at some length, not only because it deals fully with the question, but discards the opinion of Sir Thomas Munro when it was specially relied upon—see the memorandum of appeal—and adopts the views of Mr. Ellis. (Papers on Mirasi Right, page 462). The Court of Directors accepted this ruling. While the question was pending before the Provincial Court, they stated the rule to be that, whenever the waste lands of a mirasi village were proposed to be given to any other than the mirasidars the proposal should, in the first instance, be communicated to them, to whom, in the event of their being willing to cultivate or to give security for the revenue assessable on the lands, the preference should be given.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

They added, "We consider that the Government has a clear right to the revenue to be derived from the conversion of waste lands into arable." It will be noticed here that the only claim asserted on behalf of the Government was to the revenue of the lands, and that, if security was given for the payment of the revenue, then no right of interference was claimed.

The Court of Directors claimed only that right in dealing with waste lands in revenue interests which was claimed by Munro in wet lands. It would have been otherwise, of course, if the Government had claimed the proprietorship of the waste lands. After the decision was given, they re-iterated this opinion in 1844, and they added, "The question still remains undecided, whether Government possesses the right, in the event of the mirasidar refusing to cultivate or to give security for the revenue, to alienate waste lands in mirasi villages to paracoody cultivators." It will be noticed that the decision of the Provincial Court above referred to only justified a temporary alienation of lands by the Collector as protection of the revenue as in cases of land under cultivation, and it did not recognize any right when the plaintiffs offered security for its payment, whether they 'cultivated the land or not'.

In the next case that may be referred to, Appeal Suit No. 100 of 1849 in the Civil Court of Chingleput, it was decided that the mirasidars have no right to levy swatantrams or fees from payakaries who do not hold from them, but who have at their own expense brought immemorial waste into cultivation under cowle granted by the Circar. It is stated by the Judge who decided that case, that this point had been frequently decided in the negative, to which observation, there is a note appended by the Member of the Board of Revenue who published that judgment that "it would have been better had the Civil Judge quoted the cases;" but, whether the Judge was right or not, he does not decide the question under consideration, because it may be that the owner of the land has no right to receive swatantrams from trespassers. He may eject them or get mesne profits, but the fees he may not be entitled to get. Papers on Mirasi Right, page 484.

Whenever the question was brought before the Courts, the ownership of the mirasidar has been consistently upheld. In the case which is referred to in the Mirasi Papers, page 487, the Sudder Court says in 1849, "The mirasidars are the acknowledged hereditary proprietors of the soil," and it upholds their claim to recover property against the person in possession who was a pattadar himself paying revenue to Government. In page 119, Sudder Decisions of 1850, where the defendants held on pattas issued by the Collector of the District, the law was thus laid down by the Sudder Court, "The Court of Sudder Adalat are also further of opinion that the law as laid down by the Civil Judge, relative to the Government officers having authority unreservedly to dispose of any lands situated in a mirasi village that may be left waste for a period of years, is erroneous, no such right being claimed by the Government by whom the prescriptive rights and privileges of the mirasidars are upheld." In a case reported in the Sudder Court Decisions of 1854, page 140, the Sudder Court recognised the proprietary right of the mirasidars and their right to possession on such basis.

This was in 1854. These decisions, it appears to me, are in conformity with the orders of the Court of Directors, which recognise the ownership of the mirasidars and the right of Government to give the land to strangers when it becomes necessary in revenue interests to do so, a right claimed equally with reference to wet lands.

When the Survey and Settlement of the Presidency was undertaken, the Court of Directors on the 17th December 1856 directed the Madras Government to act in accordance with their previous declarations already referred to—see page 556, Mirasi Papers. When a mirasidar in Tanjore, dissatisfied with the local authorities, civil and criminal, ventured to submit a memorial to the Court of Directors, the Madras Government recognised his claim to the waste land, dissented from the Board's view that it was open to Government to give the land to whomever they liked, and held "that the best authorities were agreed that in mirasi villages the miras extended to waste as well as to arable land—" 22nd December 1855,

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Even in non-mirasi villages the Court of Directors would not assert Government ownership. Their conclusion is stated in Government Order No. 667 of the 27th May 1856: "The waste land in this country, in the villages of the plains at least, is certainly not the property of Government or the State, in the absolute sense in which the unoccupied land in the United States and some of the British Colonies is so. The village communities claim an interest in it and that interest has been universally admitted, though not accurately defined. To put up the waste to sale, entirely ignoring that prior right of the village communities, would be to introduce a totally new practice; and it would certainly be regarded by the common feeling of the country as an invasion of existing rights." See also G. O. of 5th June 1857.

In Madras itself the Collector reported in 1855, "the mirasidars have been in the habit of selling the waste lands of this Collectorate and claiming mirasi in them," and in that year the Revenue Officials denied their right only to immemorial waste, a claim, however, which they gave up on the opinion of the Advocate-General that it was unsupportable. See page 511, Mirasi Papers. Finally there is a decision in 1862. The Sudder laid down, "Adverting to the admitted fact that Tolavoor is a mirasi village, it follows as a necessary corollary from this judgment that the defendants are themselves mirasidars, and that they possess a right to all the privileges incident to a proprietary right of this character including the title to a share of samudayam or common lands". (See page 51, Decisions of Sudder Court, Madras, 1862).

These decisions, it appears to me, are binding upon us, and they fully recognise the ownership of the mirasidars in all the lands in the mirasi village including the waste. They recognise also the right of the Government, in cases where the mirasidars refused to cultivate the lands, waste or under cultivation, to let them to another for temporary cultivation. Whether in such cases the mirasidar retained his mirasi right, either to recover swatantrams of his from the tenant let in by the Government or to turn him out, was a question apparently not settled.

In 1864 the Revenue Recovery Act (Act II of 1864) was passed. Under this Act it has been finally decided that the Government have not the right to assign the waste land to a person for cultivation on the ground that the owner of the land does not cultivate it or pay revenue which the new pattadar offers to pay to Government. In Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (3), in fact, the argument advanced was that, as the State is entitled to a share of produce in every cultivated land, and if the land that is now waste is given to a new pattadar for cultivation the Government would derive its shares of the produce, the true owner cannot be allowed to defeat that alleged right of the Government to get the share by refusing to cultivate it himself and not allowing Government to give it to another. This argument was rejected, and it was held that the Government had no right to let in a new pattadar into possession, and that, if such pattadar was let in, the true owner might turn him out and obtain possession, and, therefore, that, if the land was sold for revenue which might not have been paid by the new pattadar, the purchaser would get no interest in the property. This decision has been repeatedly followed and is considered to have finally settled the question. That they have no such right to deal with ordinary ryotwari land under cultivation is now settled. The only remedy is sale for arrears of revenue. All the decisions, therefore, prior to 1864, which I have noticed and which recognized the right in the Government to put a new pattadar into possession if the mirasidar let the land waste, must be disregarded after the passing of Act II of 1864, if a mirasidar is the true owner of the land; and the decisions to which I have referred leave no room for doubt that he was recognised as true owner, and the right of Government was recognised by the decisions and by the Court of Directors only as a right for the protection of the revenue and not as ownership of the land.

In considering what took place subsequently we need, therefore, trouble ourselves only with the question of ownership of the mirasidar. In 1870 the Government in its G. O. No. 793, dated the 1st June 1870, put forward their claim to appropriate immemorial waste lands in mirasi villages for State purposes without reference to the mirasidars. From this it was held to follow that the claim for compensation for poramboke lands also was untenable.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

In 1872 the whole question was again referred to the Collectors for report with reference to the gramanattam in non-mirasi villages as well as in mirasi villages. On a consideration of the reports received from all the Collectors, the Board of Revenue stated their opinion in these terms:—"The true view of the case is that gramanattam is the communal property of the villagers, and that the Collector can only interfere with a view to benefit the community and when his action is consistent with the common law. To alter this state of things a special enactment would be necessary. No authoritative enunciation of a principle would suffice. Such a law would confiscate private property, and the end would not be such as to justify the means." The Government, however, were not prepared to go so far as the Board of Revenue in declaring gramanattam to be the communal property of the villagers. The Government said: "By immemorial usage a portion of every village is assigned rent free as a site for the dwellings of the villagers; but, as the old hukumnamahs show, the enjoyment of it is subject to regulation by the Government." This is in accordance with the common law of the land, under which the Government is only entitled to a share of the produce and, therefore, not entitled to levy any tax in land not capable of yielding any produce. With reference to mirasi villages, they said, "In purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belongs to the mirasidars, the gramanattam, no doubt, appertains to them equally with the other poramboke, but these cases are exceptional." They accordingly directed the Board to issue instructions to that effect. Accordingly the Board issued Standing Order No. 39 in March 1873 (see page 58 of the Maclean's Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue). It would be noticed that this was a final declaration made to the public that, so far as the zemindari and mirasi villages are concerned, the Government have no concern with them and they do not assert any ownership in them. With reference to non-mirasi villages they had only the power of control which was no doubt necessary in the public interests. In 1875-76 when the question of the Chingleput Revenue Settlement was under consideration, the Board in their Proceedings No. 1415, dated the 25th May 1875, pointed out, "The system is strongly rooted in law and immemorial custom. It is there, and must be regarded in many respects neither more nor less than a great but necessary evil. It is of great antiquity, is dearly cherished and has existed with more or less vitality, notwithstanding many years of persistent efforts to crush it." The admission of persistent efforts during many years to crush the mirasi system and its survival notwithstanding is significant. In 1876 the settlement rules were promulgated. The Government by these settlement rules recognised, in accordance with the views above stated, the claim of the mirasidars to a swatantram of two annas in the rupee of the Government assessment, and the fee calculated at this rate was entered in the settlement register, except as regards certain lands to which it is now unnecessary to refer. The nature of the settlement, the rates conceded to the mirasidars and the title of the mirasidar as the owner of the land were clearly set forth in the descriptive memoirs that accompanied each settlement register.

The Settlement Officer states in his report that the mirasidars agreed to abandon their obstructive tactics in the future, as they fully expected in return to receive their swatantrams from the Government karnam, who would collect them, and that the Government held out such hopes to them. But after the settlement was over, the Government said that if any such expectation were held out to the mirasidars it was unauthorized. (See G. O. No. 2868 Revenue, dated the 19th October 1909). However, the claim to swatantrams was recognised; only the Government refused to collect the fees for paying it over to them. This recognition is continued up to date—see Board's Standing Order No. 15, paragraph 28 at page 29, and

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Order No. 2868, Revenue, dated the 19th October 1900. A few years after, however, the Government came to the conclusion that the claim of the mirasidar to the gramanattam must be resisted, and, as a first step towards it, they resolved to abolish the system of double entry, which showed the name of the occupant and also the name of the mirasidars as the owner of such land, as otherwise it would appear that the Government acquiesced in the claim of the mirasidars. The double entry was accordingly stopped sometime before 1890. In 1892 and 1894 the Government resolved definitely to deny the mirasidars' claim to the waste lands in the village, including gramanattam, except to the swatantram and to a preferential right to cultivation, and they have maintained that attitude ever since. In the meantime, the question often came before the Courts. In Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), the plaintiff, as the sole mirasidar, sued the defendant, who was let into possession by a Revenue Officer, to recover possession of that property and arrears of thunduthirva at a certain rate. The Munsif refused to eject the defendant, but passed a decree for arrears of thunduvaram. On appeal, the District Judge held that, by omitting to take a revenue engagement for the lands, the plaintiff had relinquished his mirasi right in them, and reversed the decree in his favour for thunduthirva. The High Court at first held that, while the omission of the mirasidar to cultivate might authorize the Revenue Authorities to introduce a cultivator, it did not further prejudice the prescriptive rights of the mirasidar, and such rights would not be lost by the mirasidar declining to receive a patta for the lands. A review of the judgment was allowed and the case was re-argued. It may be noticed that there was no appeal before the High Court by the mirasidar against the dismissal of the claim for the recovery of the land. The question that was argued in second appeal was confined to his right to receive the dues from the cultivators who held under pattas from the Government, and the High Court held that in such cases, wherever the right was denied, there should be an enquiry whether by custom it prevailed on the estate or similar estates in the neighbourhood. It accordingly remitted issues for the trial of that question. On the point before us, as to his right to recover possession of the land, this decision is not an authority. The suggestion that the refusal of the mirasidar to cultivate the waste, which was till then not paying any revenue, might justify the revenue officials in introducing a stranger, can no longer be accepted see Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (3). The case, however, lays down the following proposition:—That it is unsafe to infer that, although tenures resembling one another in their general features are met with in many Provinces, these incidents are identical in different Provinces or in the same Province. The political circumstances have more or less affected tenures. It must not, therefore, be assumed that the incidents of the mirasi tenure are everywhere alike. The learned Judges expressed their dissent from the ruling of the District Court, that, if any ryot accepted a patta from the Government of land in which another person has mirasi right, the latter right is lost. It was pointed out that there had been no law depriving the mirasidars of any privileges they might have customarily enjoyed, and that the intention of the Government was to respect the privileges of landholders of all classes. This was the judgment of a Full Bench.

In Original Suit No. 128 of 1882* on the

* MADRAS HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL SUIT No. 128 OF 1882.

April 24, 1883.

Present:—Sir Charles Arthur Turner, Kt.,
Chief Justice.

COSAPPATTAH APPAVOO GRAMANY TODDY,
SHOPKEEPER RESIDING AT NO. 25
IN PADAVATTAH AMMAN KOIL STREET AT COSAPPATTAH WITHIN THE LOCAL LIMITS OF MADRAS—PLAINTIFF
versus—

THE RIGHT HON'BLE THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT.

Mr. Spring Branson, Counsel, for the Plaintiff.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Grant, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit alleged to have purchased from the mirasidars of Vyasarpadi

(4) 2 M. 149; 4 Ind. Jur. 560; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 375 (F. B.).

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Original Side, known as the Vyasarpadi case, Sir Charles Turner, who took part in the Full Bench judgment, came to the conclusion, that the plaintiff in that suit, who a piece of waste land within the limits of their mirasi estate, and erected a house on a part of it and made a garden. He complains that the Government on 26th April 1881 entered on the land and destroyed the house and garden and ejected him from possession and he claims to recover the property and compensation. For the defence it was pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, that the land was not the property of the plaintiff's vendors but of the Government and that the damages claimed were excessive.

The plea of limitation was not pressed at the hearing and I can find nothing to support it. The first question to be considered in this suit is whether by the Customary Law mirasidars have any title to the waste lands within the area of the mirasi estate.

It has always appeared to me that the mirasi tenure of Madras, Chingleput and Tanjore originally differed little from the zemindari tenure which obtains generally in Northern India. In the disturbances which preceded the introduction of British rule the rights of the mirasidars though to a certain extent recognised were not always respected, and when enquiries were made with a view of ascertaining precisely the incidents of the tenure, the replies received though agreeing in many principal features differed in details. Nothing was done to secure either an accurate record of the rights of the mirasidars in each village (as was attempted if not effected in Northern India on the occasion of settlement) nor was any general rule introduced to remove the uncertainty in which the enquiries instituted by the Government had left the matter.

The introduction of a revenue system which required payment of revenue for cultivated land and enabled the person accepting an engagement to relinquish that engagement in respect of any part of the lands he had either no means or no inclination to cultivate, added to the confusion of rights.

The question constantly occurring was the right of the mirasidar to waste. The better opinion appeared to be that he had a right to the waste even though he paid no revenue for it, but if he omitted to cultivate what was cultivable or to provide for its cultivation by paicars the Government might issue pattas to strangers for its cultivation. There resulted a long struggle between the mirasidars and the Government, the former unable to cultivate and unwilling to pay assessment on much of the land over which they claimed rights and on the other hand resisting the introduction of strangers.

When pattas were granted to strangers, the mirasi right was not altogether lost and in some villages the mirasidars succeeded in obtaining from the ryots introduced by Government recognition of their interests in the soil by the payment of small cesses.

In the Bengal Presidency this question had received a satisfactory solution by legislation. Regulation VII of 1822, section 8, enacted that where the waste land belonging to or adjoining any Mehal (Revenue paying estate) was very extensive so as to exceed the quantity required for pasture or otherwise usefully appropriated, the Revenue Officers were empowered to grant leases for the same to any person who might be willing to undertake the cultivation on perpetuity or for such period as the Government should determine, and assign to the zemindars or other persons who might establish the right of propriety in the lands so granted an allowance equivalent to 10 per cent. on the amount payable to Government by the lessees in lieu of or bar of all claims to or in the land so granted and of such perquisites or privileges as they might appear by the custom of the country entitled to receive. Such an enactment in Madras coupled with a survey and ascertainment of the limits of the mirasi estates would have put an end to much of the prevailing uncertainty as to rights and have secured at once the interests of the Government and the mirasidars.

From the authorities I have consulted in this and other cases which have come before the Court, I hold that the mirasidars have in this part of the Presidency a certain property in the waste and that property enables them to dispose of the occupancy of the lands subject of course to the payment of Revenue, and that this property is not necessarily lost by non-payment of revenue. I need not refer to any further authority than the replies made by Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sankariah who was for many years sheristadar in the Huzur Chutchery of Madras. Mr. Ellis was of opinion that mirasi right wherever it exists certainly extends to waste. He distinguished between cultivable waste and immemorial waste. He considered they held the former as they held the tax paying lands of the village and might cultivate it or let it. But that in the immemorial waste, though they had the right of cutting wood and quarrying (which is generally regarded as an indication of ownership), they had no right of cultivation and could not break up pasturage nor cut down productive trees such as palmyras and cocoanuts. Mr. Ellis' opinion as to immemorial waste would properly have been more accurate if he had confined it to waste adjoining mirasi lands over which the mirasidar had merely such qualified rights as are not uncommonly enjoyed by the owners of village lands adjoining immemorial pasture or wood lands. Mr. Sankaria was of opinion that the mirasidars were entitled to all waste lands included in the gramantharam or register of the lands of the village, and he mentioned that when the Government was desirous of giving to any one in rent-free tenure either a mirasi village or the waste lands or any extent of ground within the limits of the village the value of the proprietary right therein should be paid to the mirasidars and that if the proprietary right was not so purchased, the holder of the grant was entitled only to the Government revenue.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

had purchased a piece of immemorial waste land within the limits of Madras City from the mirasidars of Vyasarpadi, was entitled to it as against the Government, who destroyed his house and garden and ejected him. There was no appeal against that decision. It is a decision directly in point. He says in that judgment, "The first question to be considered in this suit is, whether by the Customary Law, mirasidars have any title to the waste lands within the area of the miras estate"; and he decided that question in the affirmative. He said: "From the authorities I have consulted in this and other cases which have come before the Court, I hold that mirasidars have, in this part of the Presidency, certain property in the waste, and that property enables them to dispose of the occupancy of the lands, subject, of course, to the payment of revenue, and this property is not necessarily lost by non-payment of revenue. I need not refer to any further authority than the replies made by Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sankarayya."

In Original Suit No. 136 of 1889 on the

He added that the sale could not be made without the consent of the mirasidar who was at liberty to refuse the price offered or to stipulate for a grant of other lands in exchange.

Mr. Ellis reported that mirasi right had always been and was when he wrote saleable in Madras and such a sale generally was made of certain shares in the villages but sales of plots were also made free of the mirasi rights. Mirasi Papers, pages 205, 207.

That the village Vyasarpadi was a mirasi village is shown by its inclusion in a list given by Mr. Ellis (Mirasi Papers, page 192), where it is designated Vyasarpadi and is described as held by three mirasidars. The plaintiff has proved that he has purchased from the persons who for upwards of 50 years have been regarded as the representatives of the three mirasidars. It has been proved that the plaintiff's vendors or the persons whom they represent from time to time have made sales of land to private purchasers and that they sold about 20 cawnies of lands in the village for upwards of Rs. 15,500 to the Government for the construction of the Madras Railway, and the evidence is uncontradicted that they had previously sold to Government other lands for the location of persons engaged in making tents for the Government—The hamlet is now called Chucklerpalayam and land for the Nellore road. It was also shown that the sale-deeds have not been produced to contradict the evidence that they had sold land to Government for the purposes of the powder factory for the Esplanade and for a powder store.

file of the Chingleput District Munsif's Court, a mirasidar sued for the value of certain bamboo trees taken away by certain coolies under the orders of the Sub-Collector. The land on which the trees stood was gramanattam poramboke (Punjab Mungal Vadi). The right of the Government was negatived and the decree passed in favour of the plaintiffs was confirmed on appeal by the District Court. There was no second appeal.

In Original Suit No. 33 of 1894 on the file of the District Munsif of Trivellore, the plaintiff contended that the land in question was his backyard, which he was entitled to enjoy rent free, and that the defendant, the Collector, had no right to levy assessment on it. The defendants denied the plaintiff's claim as mirasidar. The District Munsif, after taking evidence of usage, in an exhaustive judgment upheld the mirasidar's claim, though his contention to hold it free of rent was disallowed.

The next case that may be referred to is the one relied on by the lower Courts i.e., Sivantha Naicken v Nattu Ranga Chari (1). There the dispute was between the mirasidars and the shrotriendars and the question was, whether as mirasidars they were entitled to the compensation for waste lands taken up by Government for public purposes, or, whether the shrotriendars were so entitled. The Judges of the High Court held that the mirasidars were not entitled to it. It was proved in that case that the shrotriendars had leased portions of waste lands from time to time to the mirasidars of the village and sometimes also to strangers, without giving the mirasidars a share of the rent or other compensation. There was also an admission by one of the mirasidars that they did belong to the shrotriendars. I have already pointed out that, before the Government granted waste lands in inam, they often purchased the waste lands from the mirasidars. Accordingly, where it is shown that the shrotriendar, as grantee of Government, exercised all the rights which would be exercised by the mirasidars, if they were entitled to them, the presumption would only be that the Government purchased those rights from the mirasidars and granted them to the shrotriendar. The case, therefore, can only be taken to decide that in that particular village the so-called mirasidars had not any mirasi claims. It is true that there are a few observations against the ownership of the mirasidars in that judgment, which have been relied upon by the lower Courts. But it may be pointed out that, if those learned Judges meant to say that any rights which the mirasidars had were extinguished when the Government dealt with the lands, their judgment would be opposed to the Full Bench decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) to which I have already made reference. When they observe that no compensation for immemorial waste was recognised by Government, they ignore the facts found in Sir C. Turner's judgment. They do not refer to the fact that the Government were ordered to pay compensation by him, and as stated by the Advocate-General in his opinion already referred to, the Courts compelled the Government to pay for land taken up in 1803. When they say that the claim of the mirasidars only extends to grazing, etc., they go beyond the admission of Government of the right to swatantrams. They refer to the opinion of the Revenue Board as extracted in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) as an authority. If they had referred to the original, they would have discovered that the Revenue Board considered Mr. Ellis to be of the same view as themselves. It is, however, an opinion which is of not greater weight than the decisions and opinions of Government and the Court of Directors before and after. I think it is unnecessary to dwell further upon this case, as it has been considered in a more recent case by a Bench, of which one of the learned Judges, Mr. Justice Benson, who decided Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), was a member. In Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5), the question arose between the zemindar and the mirasidars. Both the Revenue Court which tried the case and the District Court in appeal found that in the Chingleput District waste lands were generally the property of the mirasidars, and that the water in such porambokes was also their property. The fact that the Government was not a party does not deprive the decision of its probative force. With regard to the case of Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), it was pointed out that the decision proceeded, as I have mentioned already, on the facts proved as to that particular village. The decision, therefore, in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), on which the lower Courts relied, can no longer be treated as an authority on behalf of the Government. A decision by Benson and Bhashyam Iyengar, JJ., was relied upon. It does not refer to a mirasi village, and even in the village in question it does not show any Government ownership, nor anything more than that the Government have the right to regulate the allotment of house sites among the members of the village. The decision is not against the exclusive right of the village to waste lands against outsiders, even though claiming under Government, nor does the decision in Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) refer to mirasi rights. It refers to kumaki rights. There is, no doubt, an observation in that judgment that the "right of the Government to the waste lands has now, after protracted contest, been established against mirasidars" (page 282). I am not aware of any decision to this effect other than that in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), which I have referred to. It is said in the judgment that, under the Hindu Law, the immemorial

The plaintiff has further proved that the land in suit lies within the reputed boundaries of the village and that the mirasidars have sold soil from the land.

On the other hand the evidence for the defence amounts to no more than this, that the mirasidars have not paid revenue for the land, that some officers have regarded the lands as Government land and that while certificates have been issued to purchasers of plots in some cases, in other cases they have been refused by the Deputy Collector of the Municipality. I find that the plaintiff has proved a sufficient title to enable him to maintain the suit. It was agreed at the trial that the possession of the Government should not be disturbed but that I should estimate the value of the lands, the buildings and garden and compensation for compulsory purchase and that if I held the plaintiff entitled to recover, he should obtain a decree for the same to which I find him entitled and for the costs of suit. I found the value of the land to be Rs. 100, the value of improvements including the house.....Rs. 500, and compensation for compulsory sale.....Rs. 90, and I understood the parties accepted these figures. A decree will, therefore, pass for the plaintiff for Rs. 690, with interest at 6 per cent. from 20th April 1881 to the date on which possession was taken and for the costs of suit with interest on costs at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of decree.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

(5) 30 M. 510; 17 M. L. J. 518; 2 M. L. T. 455.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

waste belongs to the Crown. If this refers to the waste in the village, the ancient deeds, the fact that the Rajas had to purchase the mirasi claims before granting inams, the constitution of the village Government and the usage proved beyond doubt show that this opinion cannot apply to mirasi villages. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider how far the general statement as to ancient Hindu Law can be supported. The question has been discussed by various authorities and by Sir Charles Turner in his minute on the land tenures of Malabar. Manu does not recognise it. He places uncultivated land in the same category as wild game, as the ancient deeds to which I have referred show, and his text refers to the origin of individual out of communal ownership. The only Indian writer I know of, who supports that view, is Jagannath Tarcapanchanana, who wrote in Bengal and of the state of things there. It is enough to state that, according to him, the ryot is only an annual tenant, even of lands under cultivation. Megasthenes also states that no private person is allowed to own land. On the other hand besides the reasons I have set out in my judgment, the limitation of the King's claim to only a share of the produce of the land under cultivation, the numerous inam grants, the undoubted fact that the King received no revenue (as imported by the word itself) from agraharams, entire villages owned by Brahmins, in which their full ownership was recognised, and was not entitled to receive anything from them according to Manu, the improbability of such claims in cases of Brahmins or military colonists have to be considered. It is, on the other hand, equally clear that, when the Hindu Law was once displaced by the Mahomedan Government, the Mahomedan Chiefs, and, in imitation of them, the Hindu Rulers also, deprived so far as they could the ancient proprietors of their property in land. I make these observations only to show that I should not be supposed to accept this opinion, and that, if necessary, the question requires further consideration. But, so far as mirasi villages are concerned, we may proceed upon facts, not theories. Munro's opinion is also relied upon. I have already discussed as to the value to be attached to it, see also Baden Powell on Village Communities, page : 79. The rest of the judgment deals with Canara and proceeds partly upon the assumption of Muhammadan Law having been in force there.

From the above review, it appears to me that the following facts are clear. The opinion of Sir Thomas Munro against the right of the mirasidars and in favour of the Government claim was authoritatively rejected when it was relied on before the Civil Court, and that of Mr. Ellis in favour of the mirasidars' claims accepted. Sir Thomas Munro's opinion was also not acted upon by the Court of Directors. Even in the cases of non-mirasi villages it was not accepted by them. The only right which the Court of Directors insisted upon and which the decisions recognised, was the right to protect the Government revenue and to take the lands away from the mirasidars, the owners of the lands, and grant them to others, if they refused to receive pittas for cultivation. Such rights, as I have pointed out, can no longer be recognised under Act II of 1864, as explained by the decision in Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (3). The Government asserted their right of ownership in 1870, but no new grounds were alleged, or, if alleged, what those grounds are, does not appear in any of the Government proceedings. In 1872, with reference to gramanattams, a fuller enquiry was made and it was expressly decided that they belonged to the mirasidars. In the case of non-mirasi villages the right to allot sites among the villagers of the community alone was assumed. No ownership was asserted even in non-mirasi villages. In 1876, at the time of the Chingleput settlement, they conceded the claim of the mirasidars to swatantram. This was done at a time when the Government had not receded from the position they had taken up in 1872, of full recognition of mirasi ownership. Swatantram was evidently intended as payment of owner's dues. The Government records contained the entry of mirasidars' ownership. Then they again asserted, about and after 1890, their right to the waste lands and to gramanattam. Besides repeating Sir Thomas Munro's statement (without any reference to the various decisions and the opinions of the Court of Directors) we have got no new facts or arguments. The real reason for putting forward this claim appears in what was stated by the Board of Revenue in their proceedings No. 1547, dated the 7th July 1886. They state "The claim now under consideration, which is a claim that, if admitted, will enable mirasidars in all mirasi villages to do what they like with nattam lands and checkmate Government by refusing to the payakaries, who have been thrust upon them by Government, houses in the village site, must be resisted as anachronistic and inconsistent with the welfare of Government and its subjects. If resisted, it will probably be asserted in a Court of Law, but even if it is, the Board do not think that any Court will hold that the right of the mirasidars over gramanattam is absolute. The utmost they will get is probably a right subject to the communal right of the villagers." That these rights of the mirasidars are inconsistent with the welfare of the people generally, may probably be true. But a Court of Law cannot, on that account, disregard a legal claim. The first step was taken by Government by altering the 'double' entry system, which recognised mirasi ownership. But the Government conceded the mirasidars' right to swatantrams. It was originally claimed and allowed, as I pointed out, in recognition of ownership. If, after the alteration in the Government records, the recognition was continued on any other basis, it has not been explained, and, in the absence of any explanation, it is a standing recognition of the right. While the Government have thus been vacillating in their views and putting forward their claims on different grounds, which deprive their pretensions of the weight otherwise due, the Courts have been consistently upholding the mirasidars' ownership. They have recognised their right to turn out the persons who were in possession of house sites. They have recognised their right to turn out the persons who were in possession of lands. It is true that to many of these suits the Government were not parties. But, as pointed out, it does not make them any the less binding authorities. Again, whenever the mirasidars and the Government were brought face to face in a Court of Law, their (the mirasidars') ownership has been recognised. No decision has been referred to in which the Government have succeeded in a Court of Law in asserting their claim to the ownership of these lands against the mirasidars; above all the mirasi right has survived a century of persistent effort to crush it. I am, therefore, of opinion that a mirasidar is, so far as the Government is concerned, the proprietor of the waste lands in the village. Whether he has the right to convert immemorial waste, that is, anadi karambu, into cultivable land and without the consent of Government or of the non-mirasidars of the village, is not a question that arises in this case; on that point, the authorities are all against the claim of the mirasidars, and, in my opinion, they are right. It is unnecessary now to give my reasons. But whatever may be the rights of the mirasidars, it is quite clear to me that the Government are not entitled to deal with the immemorial waste or introduce other pattadars. Nor must I be assumed to decide in this case that the non-mirasi residents of a village have not the right to take up cultivable waste for cultivation on undertaking to pay the mirasidars the thunduvarams and the other customary fees. That question does not arise for decision. The defendants in possession of the land do not set up their right as residents of the village to live on the plaint land. It may be that, though the mirasidars are the owners of the village waste lands and house sites, that claim is subject to the claim of the labourers and the residents in the village, and that, if the mirasidars happen to turn out a labourer from his homestead, they are bound to give him other house-sites. The records seem to support this view; and whether these rights have disappeared, it is not now necessary for me to determine, as the contending defendants rely solely upon the title created by Government grant. The facts found by the lower Courts show that the plaintiffs have asserted their mirasi claims all through, and there is such evidence of possession as the nature of the land admits of. In the circumstances, I would allow the claim of the plaintiffs, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and pass a decree for possession.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

But, as my learned brother is of opinion that the mirasi rights have now been lost by proceedings of Government and decisions of Courts, we refer to the Full Bench the following question:—

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Whether, in a mirasi village, the mirasidar is entitled to recover possession of a house-site held under a patta from Government.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They are the mirasidars of the village of Mannur in the Chingleput District, owning two out of three pangus in that village. The site in dispute is a backyard site and has been classed in the revenue accounts as the village residential gramanatham. It is in one account called cherinatham, which evidently means that it was intended to be occupied as residential quarters by Pariahs. The plaintiffs' case is that as mirasidars they were absolute owners (see paragraph 5 of the plaint) of the plaint residential manai backyard, that they had been in possession of the site till October 1903, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 7, who are Pariahs, took wrongful possession of the site in October 1903. Hence the suit for ejecting the defendants and for other reliefs. The defendants' case is that the cherinatham in the village (of which cherinatham the plaint site is a portion) does not belong to the mirasidars, that it belongs to Government, that the Government was entitled to grant the site to those applicants who wanted the site for purposes of residence, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 12 were such grantees from Government in separate portions. The defendants also denied the plaintiffs' having had possession of the plaint site at any time. The lower Courts dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. The reasons for their decision might be shortly stated thus:—

(a) The legal presumption is that land of the kind in question belongs to Government, and any rights that the mirasidars may have, are liable to be extinguished by the Government alienating the land.

(b) The documents A, B, C, D, E, H and J and the oral evidence on the plaintiffs' side do not establish the plaintiffs' title and do not prove that the plaintiffs exercised any acts showing their full ownership over the land. The oral evidence merely shows that some pretence of cultivation was made by the plaintiffs just about the time when the Government granted the site to the Pariah defendants in 1895, within twelve years before the suit (which was instituted in 1905). The plaintiffs probably also exercised the usual privilege of the mirasidars, of removing a few branches of the trees growing upon the plaint site (Exhibit PP).

The question of possession and enjoyment is a question of fact, and I am not prepared to differ from the concurrent findings of the lower Courts, that the plaintiffs had no such adverse enjoyment of full ownership right as against the Government before 1803 as would extinguish the rights of Government (if Government possessed those rights) to grant the land to the applicants on darkhast. The site was a vacant waste site till January 1905 (see Exhibit IX). The documents A to E, H and J have been fully considered by the District Munsif, Mr. S. Authinarayana Aiyar. He finds Exhibit A to be probably a forgery. He finds Exhibits B and C are not proved to relate to the plaint land, and holds that Exhibits E and G came into existence after the Rev. Clayton had requested the Collector to extend the paracheri and are, therefore, of little value. As regards H and J, which are dated the 6th June 1887 and 28th May 1891, and which are transactions in which mirasidars have asserted their right to the site, along with the other lands in the village, they are also of small value, though I cannot wholly reject them in the consideration of the evidence. I think, therefore, the opinion of the lower Courts, that the above documents and the oral evidence do not prove the plaintiffs' title, must be accepted in second appeal. The only remaining question for consideration is, whether, as mirasidars of the plaint village, in the Chingleput District, the plaintiffs had full ownership title in the plaint site and, in consequence of such full title, the Government owned no such right in the site as could enable the Government to grant the same on darkhast to others. Full and lengthy arguments have been addressed to us on the question of the nature and extent of mirasi rights. Most of the public records and the earlier judicial pronouncements on the question of mirasi rights are found entered in

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Huddleston's Mirasi Rights. I think, however, that reference to these old documents can only be a matter of academic interest at present. There has not been much continuity of policy or consistency in the declarations or policy by the Government till about 1875. But, from about forty years ago, the Government have consistently been claiming that they have got a paramount right over cherinatham sites and other communal lands even in mirasi villages and that they were entitled to grant them to applicants, so as to extinguish the rights and privileges (if any) of mirasidars in any such site. Mirasi right seems to have prevailed, formerly in the Chingleput, Arcot, Tanjore, Trichinopoly and Tinnevely Districts. So far as the Tanjore, Trichinopoly and Tinnevely Districts are concerned, the Government ceased to call most of the ryotwari holders of land in those Districts as mirasidars several years ago, and they are now called merely ryots. Most of the bigger ryo's who call themselves still in documents as mirasidars, especially in panguvali villages, have long ceased to claim any rights in immemorial wastes and communal lands, and the Government has been, it is well known, exercising full rights as owner in respect of such lands without serious objection for several years past. It is only in the Chingleput District that the question is being raised from time to time, even in comparatively recent dates. I think we are bound by the later pronouncements of this High Court as regards the nature of mirasi rights in the Chingleput District, and I, therefore, do not propose to consider the cases which had been decided before the Full Bench decision reported as Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4). The judgment in that case goes pretty fully into the history of the question of mirasi rights. The appeal in that case was twice heard (the second time on review). It is clear from that decision that the extent of the mirasi right in one village was not the same as that of the mirasi right in another village even in the same district. The opinion of Sir Thomas Munro is entitled to very great weight in connection with land tenures. In his minute of the 31st December 1824, Sir Thomas Munro expressed his belief that, by the usage of the country, the Government possessed the absolute right of disposing of the waste as it pleased in villages which were mirasi as well as in those which were not. On the 24th July 1839, Mr. Freese, the Collector of Chingleput, asked for an expression of the views of the Board as to the rights of the mirasidars and especially, whether they had the right to sell poramboke and immemorial waste, and thought that, "as regards poramboke and immemorial waste, their rights extended no further than to the privilege of grazing their cattle on them when waste and receiving the 'coopatum's' when cultivated". The Board replied to Mr. Freese that "the mirasidars could not sell immemorial waste, but that their rights were confined to grazing and cutting firewood and similar common privileges, but that these must give way to any proposition ensuring the extension and realisation of the public revenue." In 1841 the Provincial Court ruled that "the mirasidar was entitled to engage for the cultivation of waste in preference to a stranger." In 1875 the Government passed proceedings that if an immemorial waste is given to others than mirasidars, the grantee should pay the usual swatantram to the mirasidars and the mirasidars had no other rights. By the decision in the above case in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) it was held that, as regards even the rights to the swatantrams, when strangers are introduced by Government as cultivators of waste lands, the mirasidars should, in each case, prove the existence of such rights and there could be no presumption that they are entitled to such swatantrams. As I understand the Full Bench judgment in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), it established the rights of Government to let immemorial waste lands over the heads of mirasidars to others, reserving only the right in the mirasidars to get swatantrams from persons let in by Government, provided the mirasidars could establish by evidence the existence of a custom to get swatantrams, the decision reserving also the privilege of the mirasidars to cut branches from trees on immemorial waste lands, etc., and to cut firewood, etc., so long as the lands remained such waste. I need hardly say that, as regards communal poramboke lands, the rights of Government cannot be less extensive than their rights in immemorial wastes. I shall now at once come down to the case of Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), merely remarking by the way that no case decided by the High Court has been quoted before us between the case of Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) and Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), which is in conflict with the decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4). One case decided by the Trivellore District Munsif has been quoted to us. The learned District Munsif who decided that case, was the late lamented Mr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar. His judgment, I need not say, is a very able and learned one. In that case, however, it was found as a fact that the natham sites then in dispute had been in the actual occupation of the mirasidar and his ancestors for more than sixty years before suit. See page 25 of the printed papers, lines 3 to 6. With respect to the judgment, Exhibit N, therefore, I need only say that the Full Bench decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) must be followed by us in preference to Exhibit N, even if the observations in Exhibit N were not obiter. Coming then to Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), that case was decided by Mr. Justice Davies and Mr. Justice Benson, two very learned Judges who had much revenue experience in the early days of their service. The learned Judges say in that case that the rights of mirasidars to immemorial waste, apart from their preferential right to cultivate, appear to be confined to grazing, cutting firewood and similar common privileges, as stated by the Board of Revenue in the passage in this Court's judgment in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), but those rights were liable to be extinguished by the Government alienating the land. This decision is an authority directly in point. In Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) it was held that even in South Canara, as regards which District Sir Thomas Munro used the expression that "all land is private land," the general presumption is that forest and immemorial waste land is the property of the Government. The three learned Judges forming the Full Bench, namely the learned Chief Justice, Davies, J., and Benson, J., quote with approval the minute of Sir Thomas Munro of the 31st December 1824, penned by him as Governor of Madras and already referred to by me. The learned Judges say that when Sir Thomas Munro's experience reached its ripest maturity, he held that the waste lands in mirasi villages in Arcot did not belong to the mirasidars as

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Mr. Ellis thought, and that the Circar, from ancient times, has everywhere even in Arcot as well as other Provinces granted waste in inam free of every rent or claim, public or private, and it appeared in all such grants to have considered the waste as being exclusively its own property. And his opinion is again quoted that "In all villages, whether miras or not, the inhabitants reserve to themselves the exclusive use of the waste. But this right is good only against strangers, not against the Cirkar (Sirkar) which possessed, I think, by the usage of the country, the absolute right of disposing of the waste as it pleases in villages which are miras as well as in those which are not." "The State might grant those waste lands on such terms as it deemed fit and found practicable". I think this Full Bench case of Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) also establishes the Government's paramount right over waste and communal land so as to extinguish all rights and privileges (if any) of the mirasidars in such lands. See also Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (6), decided by Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., in which it was held that the principle to start from is that "waste lands belong to the State." I am, therefore, of opinion that it is now too late to set up in any village in the Madras Province that the Government has no right to grant residential sites called gramakantham or gramanatham or cherinatham to applicants, so as to extinguish the rights (if any) of persons calling themselves mirasidars. It has been held in several cases that the word "ownership," when applied to land, is a term of very loose signification in India. The Government is styled by some authorities as the only owner of all lands in India. Other authorities say that Government is entitled only to impose a land tax and that the ownership in cultivated lands vests in private persons. Some writers treat zemindars as owners of the zemindari lands, while others consider zemindars as merely farmers of revenue, entitled to get the customary rent, the cultivators of the soil being the real owners of the land and not merely lessees under the zemindar owners. All these fights are mostly disputes about words. The substance of the question

(6) 12 M. 422; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 643.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

in the present suit is whether the Government has the right to grant communal residential sites in mirasi villages to applicants for such sites, so as to extinguish the privileges of mirasidars, and, whether you call this right as flowing from its ownership of the sites or from its paramount sovereign right to make such grants, is not, in my opinion, of any practical importance.

I think that this question ought to be decided in favour of Government on the principle of stare decisis. There can be no doubt that in 1872, the then Government (the personnel of the Government usually changing every five years) thought that the mirasidars in purely mirasi villages were the owners of even the natham poramboke lands in the villages. In the Government Order No. 1684 of that year, the Government say: "In purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belongs to the mirasidars the gramanatham, no doubt, appertains to them equally with the other poramboke, but these cases are exceptional." But in 1886, the Government found that they had ignored their own prerogative too much, and, when the Revenue Board pointed it out, the Government approved of the Board's opinion. After the date of this Government Order of July 1886, there were the Board's proceedings of September 1887, and they include a very frank letter of Mr. Johnson. Mr. Johnson says:—"The mirasi bugbear is destined gradually to die a natural death if left to the ordinary operations of time." Between 1872 and 1886 we had the case of Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), (it must have been decided about 1880) which recognized the Government's paramount prerogative. As I said already, the mirasi bugbear seems to have died a natural death (using the words of Mr. Johnson) in all the other Districts except Chingleput. In Chingleput the preferential right of the mirasidars as a legal right to get darkhast grant from the Government for immemorial waste and his right to swatantrams (calculated as a fraction of the assessment) when such immemorial waste was allotted to any other person than the mirasidars, these two rights seem to have been recognised till recently and hence the efforts of the mirasidars to claim full ownership rights have not ceased even after Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga

Chari (1). As said in the letter of the Special Settlement Officer, Mr. G. A. D. Stuart, "the possession of special privileges by particular classes is an anachronism at the present day and the mirasi system is destined to go the way of all anachronisms. Even in the thirty years since the last settlement, mirasi right seems to have died out altogether in many villages. It is still fairly vigorous, however, in many places, but patience and time are all that are necessary to see the end of it."

In 1890, the Government passed Revenue Proceedings No. 704, dated the 3rd September. In paragraph 5 of that letter they say, "It is true that in 1872, the Government declared that in the exceptional case of purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belonged to the mirasidars, the village site would also appertain to the same body, but the opinion expressed was stronger in appearance than in reality, for it formed part of an argument contesting the view of the Board that village site was the communal property of the villagers and did not appertain to Government. In any case, His Excellency the Governor in Council is not now prepared to subscribe to the above dictum, and it is observed that when, in 1886, the Board challenged the correctness of the Order of 1872, the Government allowed the challenge to pass unnoticed. The said order has thus practically become a dead letter in so far as it acknowledges the claims of mirasidars to village sites, and in the revised edition of the Standing Orders the words 'mirasi villages' have been omitted from Standing Order No. 37 (formerly No. 33)." I think that, except in the matter of preferential claims to grants on darkhast of immemorial waste and except as regards the right to claim swatantrams and the right to gather leaves and firewood from trees growing on waste and poramboke lands not yet granted by Government, it is inexpedient to revive these mirasi claims, which were in various stages of disintegration before 1890, and which were never recognised by Government after 1890. I should like to hold that such claims must be taken to have been finally killed by the case of Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1). It is better to treat the present litigation as "the last flickering up of a dying fire" and as the final ineffective

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

"expiring gasp of protest" of the mirasi right fighting in its last ditch. (Preferential claims, however, of mirasidars to occupy waste lands in their villages for cultivation and, in Chingleput, to levy a fee from non-mirasidars who may take up land for cultivation have been recognised by Government even in September 1892. See Proceedings No. 1010A—Government of Madras, paragraph 4.) Those two rights and the other rights mentioned in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) may be still considered to be alive and all the other rights as dead. It is true that till 1886, the opinion of Mr. Ellis about mirasi rights was treated as more in accordance with the Customary Law than the opinion of Sir Thomas Munro. It is also true that the High Court of Madras was considered by the Government to have so far committed themselves to opinions in favour of the mirasidars that it was safer not to contest the matter by a frontal attack in the High Court itself, but to have it fought out in the District Courts. As I have already said, however, the case of Sakkaji Rau v. Lutchmana Gaundan (4), which was decided about 1880 by the Madras High Court, did not unconditionally recognise the mirasidars' right, but held that the mirasidars should prove even the customary right to swatantrams where it is denied. There can be no doubt that, till 1886, the inclination of the High Court was to hold that mirasidars had ownership rights in immemorial wastes and in natham sites also. But the Revenue Board and the Government from 1886 were determined, by all legitimate means, to establish the paramount rights of Government to grant natham poramboke sites, and also to deny all other rights claimed by the mirasidars, except the right of preference when grants to immemorial wastes are made and to obtain swatantrams if grants are made to others than mirasidars, and similar rights. It must be admitted that this resolve of the Board of Revenue and of the Government, so far as natham sites are concerned, was arrived at, not for the purpose of obtaining more revenue or other pecuniary benefit, but in the interests of the public, especially of the depressed classes. As my learned brother has put it in his judgment, "That these rights of the mirasidars are inconsistent with the welfare of the people may probably be true." Subsequent to 1886, we have got at least two judgments of this High Court, one being the case of Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) and the other of Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), which two decisions, it seems to me, clearly follow the opinion of Sir Thomas Munro in preference to the opinion of Mr. Ellis. The observation in Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) (which is a Full Bench case decided by the Chief Justice and Justices Davies and Benson) is that "the right of the Government to waste land has now, after protracted contest, been established against the mirasidars." This seems to indicate that the decisions till 1886, which favoured the mirasidars, were given during the first stages of the contest, and that the final battles had gone in favour of the Government. As remarked by my learned brother in his judgment, it may be that this observation rests upon the results of a comparatively fewer number of cases decided by the High Court after 1886 than the number of cases decided before 1886 which held the other view. In the case of Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) the contest was between the zemindar and the mirasidars and the paramount right of the Government as ruling authority was not in contest. As between the zemindar and the mirasidars, the evidence in that particular case seems to have (in the opinion of several lower Courts) established the rights of the mirasidars in poramboke lands and the High Court was "not prepared to interfere with the finding of fact at which all the lower Courts have arrived at." The judgment in Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) (to which Benson, J., was a party) does not dissent from the observations in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) and Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), (to which decisions also, Benson, J., was a party) but, so far as the relative rights of the zemindar and mirasidars were concerned, Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) decided in one way on the evidence in that case, and Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) decided the other way. I find myself unable to hold that Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) has, in any way, weakened the authority of Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) or the Full Bench decision in Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2). Under these circumstances, I do not see my way to hold that the mirasidars have got higher rights than are recognised in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) and Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), without practically overruling those decisions. My learned brother's inclination being against the opinion expressed in those two decisions, and as the question is a very important one, I concur with him in referring the question of the extent of the mirasidars' rights to natham poramboke sites to a Full Bench.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

This second appeal came on for hearing as per above order on the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th and 23rd August 1915 before the Full Bench.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyengar (Advocate General) and Mr. A. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the Appellants Nos. 2—5.—The tract of country which lay between the North and South Pennar was known as Thondaimandalam and comprised Chingleput and the two Arcots, North and South. The mirasi rights recognised by the Hindu and Muhammadan Kings before the British occupation were of two descriptions, viz., pashankarai and arudikarai. Under the former right, the whole village was held in common and mesne profits were divided by the villagers. Under the latter right, all the properties were held finally and completely under a system of severalty. All the lands that were not cultivated were treated as samudayam or common property. There were two kinds of tenants in such mirasi villages, and they were called parakudis and ulkudis. Parakudis were residents of other villages holding lands under mirasidars on rent and ulkudis were those who had settled down in mirasi villages and who had been there for generations and had acquired occupancy rights.

The extracts read by me give a clear indication of the fact that village communities did exist as factors even as late as 1820, and that those institutions were not mere myths.

Sir Thomas Munro's minute dealt with the economic side of the problem relating to mirasi rights, and not with the legal side of it. Privileges as regards waste lands were not peculiar to mirasi villages and even Sir Thomas Munro admitted the fact that the samudayam tenure existed, and that was conclusive of the fact that village settlements did continue even after British occupation. Sir Thomas Munro's minute dealt with the question more with a view to securing the right of Government to revenue in mirasi villages, but in the present appeal, they had not to deal with the question of revenue. The mirasidars in this case were only concerned with the question as to whether Government could deprive mirasidars of their right to immemorial waste. Government had admitted the claim of the mirasidars to such right, though there was a tendency displayed in the later orders to resist that claim.

Mr. Nugent Grant (Government Pleader), for Respondent No. 15.—The general proposition is that ownership in the soil is vested in Government and Act III of 1905 (Land Encroachments Act) is conclusive proof of the fact. Government, no doubt, recognised that mirasidars had certain privileges, the main privileges being preference to cultivation. The presumption under the Common Law was that Government was the owner of the soil in all gramanattams. Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (7) and Putloor Boyanna v. Golusu Asethura (8) support this proposition. Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (6) also lays down that with regard to waste lands, the presumption is that poramboke lands generally are the property of Government. Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) accepted the view of Sir Thomas Munro that the property in waste lands in mirasi as well as non-mirasi villages belonged to Government.

The onus was on the plaintiff (mirasidar) to show that he was the owner of the village sites in mirasi villages, and that he had either by grant or other means acquired a title as against Government. So far as the question of grant was concerned, there was nothing on record in the present case to show that any grant existed. It was the plaintiff who ought to satisfy the Court that there had been a course of proceeding or action with regard to particular property or particular right which could have only come into existence by any grant. As regards the village site in the present case there was nothing to show that for a course of years the plaintiff had been exercising any acts of ownership. The plaintiff simply asked the Court to hold that, because the property in question formed part of a mirasi village, he had a right to that property. There were no instances on record to show that the increase of privileges on the part of mirasidars in regard to quarrying, fishery, pasturage or minerals had ever existed, and even if such privileges had existed in the remote past, they must be held to have since fallen into disuse. The attitude of Government had been to give mirasidars preferential right to waste. Mir. sidars had also preferential right over strangers for pattahs in respect of cultivable waste; and as regards immemorial waste, mirasidars had no better right than that of pasturage and taking firewood, and those were ordinary privileges which attached to them as much as they attached to every other village community in a ryotwari tract. The plaintiff's case was that every property in a mirasi village belonged to mirasidars; but as regards immemorial waste, it was shown that the property did not belong to mirasidars. Sankaran Nair, J., started with the assumption that a right to excavation was indicative of ownership, but the past history of mirasi tenure did not warrant that assumption.

(7) 27 M. 386.

(8) 24 Ind. Cas. 735; 16 M. L. T. 48.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The proceedings of the Board of Revenue and minutes of the Court of Directors show that nowhere in those references had Government ever admitted the rights of mirasidars to be anything better than the rights of the ordinary ryots. Such of the rights as were conceded to mirasidars accrued by virtue of their position as headmen and nothing more. The Board of Revenue was decidedly of opinion that mirasidars had no right to sell or mortgage poramboke or immemorial wastes. The decision of Mr. Lewin of the Provincial Court that the property in immemorial waste belonged to mirasidars was not supported by any authority other than that of Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sankara Aiyar. The attitude of Government of that time was that Government should take the consent of mirasidars before giving immemorial waste lands to strangers for cultivation. Mr. Lewin's judgment was based on a mistake of fact and in that circumstance that judgment was erroneous.

The property in gramanattams absolutely belonged to Government and no mirasidar was entitled either by custom or otherwise to any rights over them except those which Government had chosen to bestow upon them. The effect of the Government orders issued from time to time on the subject of mirasi tenure was that Government recognised certain privileges of mirasidars in respect of village sites and that Government were willing to preserve those rights to them. If the property in village sites absolutely belonged to Government, there was no justification for holding that Government had ever waived their right to prevent mirasidars from alienating or otherwise disposing of village sites for purposes other than those which had been originally intended.

Fakir Muhammad v. Tirumala Chariar (9) was opposed to the view that immemorial waste was the property of the mirasidars.

No issue was raised in the lower Courts as to custom, but the argument in the Division Bench of the High Court was based largely on custom. The general issue as to whether mirasidars had a proprietary right in gr manattams or other poramboke lands was much wider of the plea raised in the case. If their Lordships came to a decision as to the proprietary right of mirasidars in respect of soil in village sites, that decision might be held to apply to other rights of mirasidars in mirasi villages. A decision sought to be obtained with regard to certain rights in a particular District might be subsequently sought to be made applicable to similar rights in other Districts. In a Government Order issued in 1872, Government no doubt recognised proprietary right of mirasidars over gramanattams, but that recognition was not conclusive admission as against Government, though it might be treated as evidence against the Government. Government issued that order on flimsy materials.

(9) 1 M. 205; 1 Ind. Jur. 299; 1 M. L. R. 319; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 136.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Mirasidars had certain powers of superintendence over the villages conferred upon them by Government and those powers were now made a foundation of their claim to ownership in village sites.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The question referred to us is, whether in a mirasi village the mirasidar is entitled to recover possession of a house site held under a patta from Government: and, to show what it involves, it may be well to state at once the circumstances in which it arises in the case under appeal. On the 16th November 1894, Mr. George Stuart Forbes, Acting Collector of Chingleput, passed orders on certain petitions praying for an extension of the cheri nuttam, or part of the village sites reserved for Pariah, in the village of Mannur in the Saidapet Taluk not far from Madras. He began by observing that out of the whole Survey No. 14 A of 23 acres which was classed as village site, 97 cents, or nearly one acre, identical with Survey No. 45 in the paimash or old survey, was shown in the paimash accounts as “Cherial Pizhakkadai” or reserved for Pariahs. There had, he went on to say, been no erection on this site by any mirasidar since the date of the paimash (apparently about 1845) and the only building on it was an arrack shop. He did not interfere with this, but stated that the rest of the plot was available for sites in extension of the paracheri or Pariahs’ quarters, and directed it to be laid out in streets and house sites in such a manner as to facilitate sanitation and the convenience of the residents. As regards any claims from mirasidars, he merely observed that “the short usurpation by the mirasidars in recent times, which is supported by the entry in the Adangal of Seshachellam Chetty (plaintiff) and others,” is invalid and cannot be recognized.” The Adangal (Exhibit G) is described as the village account of lands held in the village according to Survey numbers. The paimash register only contained the names of actual occupiers of sites in the nuttam as appears from Exhibit X, but in 1886 it came to light that at some time or other the names of the mirasidars had been inserted in the Adangal as well as the names of the actual occupiers, which alone appeared in the paimash register, and had also been inserted as owners of the unoccupied sites as regards which no names appeared in the paimash register; and this was apparently what Mr. Forbes was alluding to in speaking of the recent usurpation. Exhibits I to VIII are applications for sites put in immediately after the Collector’s order by residents in the paracheri which, the endorsements show, were granted or refused according to the merits. This was in 1894 and early in 1895, and the present suit was not brought until January 1905, ten years later. The plaint alleges that the plot was the property of the plaintiffs and that they constructed and rented to the 13th defendant a leaf-roofed shop marked B in the annexed plan; that the defendants on 17th October 1903 took wrongful possession of the plot and erected the shed marked C; and the defendants Nos. 1 to 12 with the 13th defendant afterwards dismantled the shop B and erected the sheds D and E. Defendants Nos. 1 to 12 pleaded that the site was not the property of the plaintiffs but of Government who had granted the sites thereon. They alleged that the building C (a mission hall) and E (a sundries bazaar) had always been in existence and that D had been erected three or four months previously as the shop B was in a ruined state. The 13th defendant pleaded that he was only a servant of the owner of the toddy shop, and the latter was added as 14th defendant but remained ex parte. The District Munsif at first dismissed the suit on the ground that the Secretary of State in Council was not a party, but on appeal the plaintiffs undertook to make him a party, and this having been done, the Collector filed a written statement on his behalf as 15th defendant in which he alleged that the plaintiffs have not and never had any title to the property, and never occupied it in a manner inconsistent with the rights of Government, and that Government had exercised rights of ownership over it to the knowledge of the mirasidars. The entries in the village accounts for some years by officers who were themselves mirasidars were, it was alleged, only paper entries and did not affect the proprietary right of Government. In his judgment the

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

District Munsif observed that in the Settlement Register, Exhibit F (1875), the names of the 1st plaintiff and the other mirasidars were not entered against Survey No. 14 A, the village site, and thenceforward they had never taken any steps to assert the right to the land and have it included in their pangu lands. The District Judge took the same view and observed that the plaintiffs had never cultivated the land, and had put up the thatched hut B in 1902 long after Government had assigned the sites. They accordingly dismissed the suit, but held it was not barred as it was instituted within 12 years of the grants made under Mr. Forbes's orders at the end of 1894. The result of the findings would, therefore, appear to be that the site in question was waste land over which the plaintiffs never exercised any rights of ownership until some years after it had been allotted by Government in extension of the cheri or Pariahs' quarters.

The Privy Council have very recently pointed out in Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (10) that, as regards lands such as these which have been ceded by native rulers, the only enforceable rights are those conferred by the Crown by express or implied agreement or by legislation; but in order rightly to appreciate the action of the Crown or Government, it is necessary to know something of the pre-existing state of things. We have not been referred to any critical discussion of the legendary settlement of Thondamandalam, as this part of the country was called, by 300,000 Vellalas from the west coast of India which is referred to in the judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., and had been dismissed as fabulous by Sir Thomas Munro in his well-known minute. What we do know is that this District was the seat of an ancient civilisation, and that Kanchi or Coonjeevaram was the capital of the Pallava dynasty who flourished until their overthrow by the Cholas about the end of the 9th century; and that it was afterwards one of the principal cities in the Chola Kingdom, which again was absorbed in the Vijayanagar Empire in the 15th century. That Empire had fallen into decay, when in the middle of the 17th century one of its nominal dependants granted the East India Company four mirasi villages on which Fort St. George and the adjoining White and Black Towns, as they were then called, were erected. To these was added, some years later, the shrotriem village of Triplicane; and after the advent of the Muhammadans three more mirasi villages, which are now included in the Municipal limits of Madras, were granted in 1694 during the reign of Aurangzib. Further grants were made early in the 18th century of villages with what are now within the Municipal limits and beyond, and finally the whole District of Chingleput as it now is was assigned by the Nabab of Carnatic to the Company in return for their services against his enemies and became known as the jaghir. It was subsequently laid waste by Hyder in his invasion of the Carnatic, and it was only some years after 1784, when peace was restored, that the question with which we are now concerned came to the front in connection with the proposed introduction of a Permanent Settlement on the lines on which Lord Cornwallis had carried out the Permanent Settlement of Bengal, and it became necessary to investigate the position and rights of the mirasidars in relation to the land. If they were the real owners of the land it could not be parcelled out among zemindars under Regulation XXV of 1802 which reproduced the Bengal Regulation of 1793; and later, when the idea of a Permanent Settlement was given up and the system of ryotwari settlement with the individual cultivator was coming into favour, this alleged ownership of the mirasidars was again an obstacle to the introduction of settlement with the actual cultivators. The result of the controversy in the early years of last century was that the settlement was made with the mirasidars and not with zemindars or with the actual cultivators; but many questions such as those with which we are dealing were left outstanding and lapse of time has not made it any easier to settle them, in spite of the lengthy discussions which are to be found in the Mirasi Papers which go down to 1864 and in the further papers which have been specially printed for this case, (10) 30 Ind. Cas. 303; 42 I. A. 229; 23 C. L. J. 1; 19 C. W. N. 1087; 13 A. L. J. 953; (1915) M. W. N. 563; 29 M. L. J. 242; 18 M. L. T. 179; 2 L. W. 731; 17 Bom. L. R. 730; 39 B. 625.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

It is unnecessary to go into old controversies as to ownership of land in India as to whether, as has been sometimes held, the State was the owner of all land which it had not actually alienated and the cultivators were merely tenants under it, or whether the cultivators are the owners subject to the right of the State to share in the produce, or whether, as James Mill thought (Fifth Report, Ed. Higginbotham, page 816), Government and the cultivators should be regarded as "joint tenants", by which he probably meant co-owners. In 1796 (M. P. 26) the Madras Government went so far as to assert it to be the great feature in all the Governments of India that the Sovereign is the lord of the soil. As regards waste lands at any rate, it seems clear, as held in Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), that by the Muhammadans waste lands in conquered countries were always held to be the property of the State. It may be taken then that the principle to start with generally is that in India waste or unoccupied lands at any rate belong to the State, and the Madras Legislature has in Madras Act III of 1905, which is modelled on Bombay Act V of 1879, given statutory force to this rule which had previously been held applicable to lands of this character.

The question then is, whether unoccupied lands in mirasi villages in this District, and more especially the unoccupied lands set apart for house sites in the villages, form an exception to the general rule and were recognised as private property when or after the British Government succeeded to the previous rulers. The distinctive thing about the district is the persistence until very recent times of the system of joint cultivation of the village lands by the village community of mirasidars, the actual cultivation being done by a dependent population working under them. This is a stage of agricultural development through which various peoples have passed and of which traces are to be found in England, Germany and Russia, both European and Asiatic, and even in Japan (see Lewinski's Origin of Property, London, Constable and Co. 1913), but it by no means necessarily connotes the ownership by the cultivators of the adjoining waste or unoccupied lands, or implies that the cultivators have greater rights in respect to them than inhabitants of other villages in the neighbourhood where the system does not prevail, as was pointed out by Sir Thomas Munro. The right of the State to admit cultivators to uncultivated land for the purpose of realizing its revenue, which is a necessary incident of the immemorial revenue system and is recognized in the recently published Arthashastra of Kautilya dating from 300 B. C., Bk. 2, C. 1, section 47, necessarily involves the right of the State to provide such cultivators with sites as the nattam. Nor is it a necessary inference that the village community owned all the land within the boundaries of the village, for as observed by Mr. Hodgson in the report on the Survey of Dindigul (1) note (Fifth Report: Edition Higginbotham Co., at page 607), "the whole lands of a Province in India, whether cultivable, arable, waste, jungle or hills, have been from time immemorial apportioned to a particular village so that all lands are within the known boundaries of some village. The total area of all villages forms the whole landed surface of that particular Province". And there is satisfactory evidence, as appears from Mr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar's Ancient India and Mr. Vincent Smith's Early History of India, 3rd Edition, 1913, that under the Cholas the lands and cultivation were carefully surveyed and holdings registered at least a century before our Domesday Survey.

It is perhaps hardly safe to make any positive assertion about the ownership of the nattam and other unoccupied lands in periods so remote as to which the evidence is so scanty, but the great irrigation works and temples which have come down to us from this period and were probably produced by forced labour point to active intervention and control by the State and do not support the conclusion that the village cultivators, whether cultivating jointly or individually, were regarded as the owners of land which they had not reclaimed to cultivation in the absence of evidence of user or recognition.

As evidence of recognition it is said by Sankariah in the Mirasi Papers that former rulers were in the habit of purchasing lands from the villagers to present them to temples and in the three volumes of Dr. Hultzsch's South Indian Inscriptions there are inscriptions nearly a thousand years old that appear to bear this out, but it does not appear that the lands so acquired were waste.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Nor is such a view supported by what we know of the history of the mirasi villages now included in the municipal limits of Madras which, as already mentioned, were acquired in the 17th century and the years immediately following long before the present controversy arose. The three bulky volumes, recently brought out by Col. Love for the Government of India under the title of "Vestiges of Old Madras," contain a digest of all that is to be found in the records about the city from its foundation down to the end of the 18th century; and it is remarkable that they do not appear to support the claim of the mirasidars to the waste lands of the villages. Such references as there are seem to show that the Madras Government treated all waste lands as at its disposal and the claim would appear not to have been disputed. See Volume I, pages 170, 579-80; Vol. II page 127 and pages 193 and 194. In Volume II, page 505, under the year 1763, we find mention of numerous leases granted by the Company of large areas for the erection of the garden houses that form a feature of the city; and Mr. Ellis' answer in the Mirasi Papers to the 9th question put to him suggests that, when he wrote in 1814, a great part of the village lands had been converted into gardens in this way; and in the suit in the Supreme Court in 1808, which will be referred to later, Sir Thomas Strange, C. J., stated that the only cases as regards mirasi villages which came before the Mayor's Court in the 18th century dealt with another question.

The fact relied on by Sankaran Nair, J., that in the conveyances of the 18th and early 19th centuries, which are collected in the Mirasi Papers, the transferor purports to convey not only his cultivable lands but also all his rights in the nattam and the waste lands which had not been divided, and in fact deals with them as the subject of co-ownership—is of course to be considered, but as against the State which was the other party interested, such claims appear not to be entitled to much weight except in so far as they are supported by actual user or recognition.

Coming now to the views expressed by Mr. Place and later by Mr. Ellis, Collector of Madras, and his sheristadar Sankariah in answer to the questions put by the Board of Revenue in 1814 (Mirasi Papers, page 155), though they were no doubt well warranted in championing the mirasidars and asserting their proprietary interests against proposals to ignore them either in favour of zemindars or of the actual cultivators, it by no means follows that the mirasidars were the owners of the waste lands in the village as well as of the lands they had reclaimed to cultivation. Sankariah, a successful official of those days, who, as was pointed out by my learned brother in the course of the argument, was almost certainly a mirasidar himself, no doubt says distinctly that they owned the waste, but Mr. Ellis speaks only to a restricted right of user falling short of full ownership.

Eventually even as regards cultivable waste the mirasidars' ownership has not been fully established, and though they had and still have a preferential right to such lands, yet on failure to cultivate them they are liable to have cultivators put in by Government. Mr. Ellis and Sankariah no doubt claim that they were entitled to be restored within 105 years on making compensation, but that claim has not been substantiated. No doubt their claim to receive swatantrams, or payments from the newly admitted cultivators, is evidence of their claim to ownership of the waste which they had reclaimed to cultivation; but, according to the decision of the Full Bench in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), such swatantrams are not generally payable but only on proof of custom. Further Mr. Ellis' views have never won complete acceptance. In 1822 (Mirasi Papers, page 423), the Court of Directors found fault with the Madras Government for having printed and circulated to the Service the answers of Mr. Ellis, as a question of this kind should be decided not upon one man's opinions alone but upon a consideration of all the evidence which could be obtained. They considered the course adopted would to a great degree have the effect of imposing upon the Service the opinions of Mr. Ellis as the authoritative conclusion of Government. The Government in reply disclaimed any such intention, and we find the Board of Revenue treating the question of the extent of the mirasidars' rights in waste lands as an open one and framing a fresh series of questions for Collectors on the subject (Mirasi Papers, page 427) on the 11th December 1823. The Government of Sir Thomas Munro did not pass any orders on these proceedings so that fresh queries were never sent to Collectors; and on 31st December 1824, Sir Thomas Munro wrote his well-known minute on the state of the country and the condition of the people, in which speaking with his wide experience gained by him as a Settlement Officer in various districts of Southern India as to the system prevailing under the Vijianagar and Muhammadan rulers he incidentally contested nearly all Mr. Ellis' opinions and conclusions. Selections from the minutes of Sir Thomas Munro, Ed. Arbuthnot, Madras. Ed. Higginbotham, 1886, page 228. The question discussed by Sir Thomas Munro no doubt related to the cultivable waste rather than to waste which was excluded from cultivation either as unfit or as reserved for other purposes; but there can be no doubt that he would have expressed himself as strongly as regards the ownership of waste excluded from cultivation.

SESHACHALA CBETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The paimash survey and accounts of the district appear from the District Manual to date from the years immediately following, and the extract from the paimash accounts, Exhibit X, exhibited in this case and dating it is said from 1845, shows that, while the name of the owner is given in the case of each occupied site in the nattam, no name is entered against the unoccupied portion, which goes to show that the private ownership of the unoccupied nattam was not then recognised. In 1839, the Board (Mirasi Papers, page 452) expressed the opinion "that as regards immemorial waste the rights of the mirasidars are confined to the pasturing of their cattle, the cutting of firewood, etc., and similar common privileges, but these must always give way to any proposition ensuring the extension and realisation of the public revenue." The passage is important as it was cited by the Full Bench in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) and adopted as laying down the true rule in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1).

We are not, however, immediately concerned in this case with the general question of the ownership of waste lands but with the ownership of part of the village nattam or village site. The nattam or area reserved for house sites is a feature of every village, zemindari, ryotwari, and mirasi alike, and consists of unassessed land set apart for the erection of houses and for the adjoining backyards. In Dr. Hultzsch's South Indian Inscriptions, Volume II, part 1, No. 4, we find the ur-nattam and parocheri, or Pariahs' quarters, enumerated with tanks and burying grounds as free from assessment, and there are other inscriptions of the same kind showing that a portion of the site was set apart for Pariahs or untouchables from very early times. So far as the inscriptions enable us to judge, the affairs of the villages appear to have been managed by sabhas or assemblies of leading men in the villages, who were probably left to allot house sites as the occasion arose without interference. Such a power of allotment would not connote ownership, but might of course give rise to it if it led to the sites being dealt with as private property and sold or leased as such.

As regards waste lands generally, the Mirasi Papers contain discussions as to whether the mirasidars were entitled to compensation for waste lands acquired for public purposes, and that such claims were in some instances admitted appears not only from the instances given but also from the fact mentioned in the Chingleput District Manual and also by Mr. Stuart in his report in 1909 that Government in 1870 decided to refuse any longer to pay compensation for such lands. The case which subsequently came before Sir Charles Turner will be considered later. As regards the nattam itself in 1856 (M. P. 358, 553) the question was the subject of a strong divergence of views between the Board of Revenue and the Government of the day which favoured the mirasidar's claims and went so far as to dispossess in his favour a stranger whom the mirasidar had sued unsuccessfully in the Civil Courts. The papers were sent Home, but the Court of Directors in their reply did not commit themselves to one view or the other.

In 1869 Government framed darkhast

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

rules (as to applications for grants of land) in the District in which the prior claims of the mirasidars were recognised. Rule 13, however, provided that tanks, threshing floors, burying grounds, etc., should not be given away on darkhast and concluded, "applications for gramanattams or village sites shall not be entertained." In 1872 as appears from G. O., dated 16th December 1872, No. 1684, the Board called for returns from Collectors as to the practice in their districts of giving gramanattam land as house sites to persons who were neither pattadars nor actual cultivators; and the answer from Chingleput was it was granted to all applicants on a fixed scale. This goes to show that the mirasidars were, to say at least, not then very conscious of their rights now claimed for them. Commenting on the answers returned, the Board put forward the view that the gramanattam in villages is the communal property of the villagers, a position which may be taken up with regard to non-mirasi as well as to mirasi villages. But the Government of the day were not prepared to go so far, as they were of opinion that the old hookamnamahs showed that enjoyment of the gramanattam was subject to regulation by Government. These hookamnamahs no doubt related to non-mirasi villages, for as already observed, whatever the ownership of the nattam, the mirasidars were probably left to allot sites in the nattam according to requirements and this was probably not interfered with by the Muhammadan Rulers, who generally rented the villages to the mirasidars themselves at a fixed rental, except in so far as they may have granted villages in inam. The District Manual contains a long list of inams, but there are no particulars of the dates or terms of the grants. In passing orders on this occasion asserting the title of Government in the nattam in ordinary villages Government made an exception in favour of purely mirasi villages, where they said "the gramanattam no doubt appertains to the mirasidars equally with the other poramboke." Accordingly they issued rules on the subject excepting zemindari and mirasi villages and villages which were private property, although the Collector's answer showed that the grants of the nattam had been made by the Government without opposition in Chingleput. Two years later, however, when the Settlement of Chingleput was effected, an entry was made in the Settlement register of each village (cf. Exhibit F) that in the gramanattam no new enclosure was to be made or new building erected without permission in future, which shows that the nattam was not then treated as completely at the disposal of the mirasidars. The G. O., dated 18th August 1886, No. 724 Revenue, contains a Board's proceeding rejecting the claim of the mirasidar to control the cherinattam in which the claims of the mirasidars are vigorously attacked on much the same grounds as have been urged before us, and Government did not interfere with the Board's decision but recorded the proceedings without remark. In 1890 Government followed this up by directing that in the Adangal accounts, where in addition to the name of the occupier, the name of the mirasidar was found, it should no longer be recorded. The paimash register, Exhibit X, in this case only gives the names of the owners of sites in actual occupation and does not show any owner against No. 45, the suit land, but merely describes it as the backyard of the cherimen. At some subsequent period the names of the mirasidars were entered as owners in the Adangal account, not only of unoccupied sites like this, but also of the occupied sites. It was alleged that this had been done surreptitiously to create evidence of ownership and the mirasidars' names were struck out in cases where there was an occupier, but apparently were left in when the site was unoccupied. In these circumstances I cannot give the entries in the Adangal accounts the weight that might otherwise attach to them. The question came up again in 1892, when Government expressed themselves more guardedly, observing "the question of the ownership of Pariah house sites is one of legal right and if the mirasidars have it they can only be expropriated by compensation." Lastly we have the report of the Special Settlement Officer, Mr. Stuart, in G. O. 2868, dated 19th October 1909, which shows that where the mirasi right is in the hands of a few, the claim to the village site is still often kept alive and used for the purpose of keeping the rest of the population in subjection, and that in other cases no attempt is made to enforce it.

MSESNAHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Coming now to the decisions of the Courts—the judgment of Sir Thomas Strange in 1808 in the Thondiarpet case (Mirasi Papers, page 127) shows that the right of the mirasidars to the village site was proved in that case by abundant oral evidence to the satisfaction of the Chief Justice, who, however, observed that it did not appear and was not material in which respect, if any, the mirasidars were subject to the intervention of Government except for the Sircar share. The principle which was laid down and on which the judgment proceeded was that the nature of the mirasi right was to be ascertained by user; and that still appears to me to be the governing test. In 1841 (M. P., 462) we have the judgment of Mr. Lewin in the Provincial Court of Chingleput in a suit to which Government was a party and did not appeal, in which as to cultivable waste the law was taken from Mr. Ellis' answers and Government were held to have no right to issue cowles of lands in mirasi villages which the mirasidars were willing to cultivate. This does not really amount to more than a recognition of the mirasidars' preferential right to cultivate, and must now be read with the subsequent Full Bench decision in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4). The judgment in 1849 of the Sudder Adalat in Special Appeal No. 108 of 1844 (M. P., 483) is more directly in point, as it recognised the mirasidars as the hereditary proprietors of the soil including the nattam, and laid down that if a purakudi ceased to cultivate, he became a casawargam and liable to pay rent for his backyard to the mirasidar who clearly had the right of ejection. The judgment in Special Appeal No. 186 of 1859 (M. P. 485) was also in a suit in which the mirasidar was held entitled to evict the casawargam tenant from a house site which had been in his occupation for a great number of years on paying compensation for the buildings he had suffered the defendants to construct and occupy. The fact that these two cases are from Kumbakonam does not detract from their weight, as the rights of the mirasidars were fuller in Chingleput than in Tanjore. Coming now to the year 1882, in that year Sir Charles Turner, C. J., in a suit* to which Government was a party, upheld the right of the mirasidars to compensation for a piece of waste land in the village of Vyasarpadi on the authority of Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sankariah, and there was no appeal from his decision. There was also a decree of the District Munsif of Trivellore in Original Suit No. 31 of 1894, in which the right of the mirasidar to the nattam was asserted, though it was at the same time held that the mirasidar was liable to be assessed for cultivation on the nattam. There was no appeal, and the papers suggest that Government was not anxious to bring the question before the higher Courts in the hope apparently that the mirasidars' claims would die out of themselves. In Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) Davies and Benson, JJ., in second appeal refused to interfere with the finding of the lower Courts that the shrotriendar in that case, who stood in the place of Government, and not the mirasidars of the village, were entitled to the compensation for a piece of waste land in a mirasi village compulsorily acquired. There was evidence of user in the particular case, but the learned Judges laid down generally that "the rights of the mirasidars over immemorial waste (apart from their preferential right to cultivate) appear to be confined to grazing, cutting firewood and similar common privileges as stated by the Board of Revenue in 1839 in the passage already quoted in this Court's judgment in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), but those rights were liable to be extinguished by the Government alienating the land" This passage does not, however, deal directly with the ownership of the nattam. In the South Canara forest case, Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), Benson, J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench again laid down that both under the Hindu and Muhammadan Governments waste lands belonged to the State, and observed incidentally that the right of Government to the waste lands had now, after protracted contest, been established as against the mirasidars on the East Coast, but this point did not arise for decision. We have also been referred to the decision of Benson, J., and myself and in Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5), where we upheld the finding of the two lower Courts on the evidence that a certain tank in a shrotriem mirasi village belonged to the mirasidars and not to the shrotriendrar, or Government assignee. I do not think that Benson, J., who wrote the judgment, intended to lay down anything inconsistent with the opinions expressed by him in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) and Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2). The decision in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) was explained as having proceeded on the facts proved as to the particular village, and not as laying down as matter of law that poramboke lands in mirasi villages must necessarily be the property of the zemindar, that is to say, of Government or its assignee.

*See 40 Ind. Cas. 920n—Ed.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I have now dealt with the most important aspects of the question, and it only remains for me to formulate my conclusions in this important and difficult case. The village nattam is land in the village set apart from time immemorial for house sites and cannot be used for any other purpose so long as it retains its character as nattam. On the evidence with which I have dealt I am not satisfied that before the advent of British rule and especially under the Muhammadan Government unoccupied nattam was generally recognised by Government as the private property of the mirasidars, though no doubt where, as was frequently the case, they were themselves the renters of the village, the control would remain in their hands, and they may in individual cases have exercised rights of ownership over it.

The next question is—has the mirasidars' ownership been established subsequently either by Government recognition or by judicial decisions in the proceedings and cases to which I have referred. As regards recognition, it cannot be said that the Board of Directors, or their successor, the Secretary of State, have ever recognized the mirasidars as owners of the nattam, and the varying views of successive Governments in Madras on a subject which has never ceased to be controversial do not appear to me to establish any general right based on recognition.

As regards the cases, some of the early decisions are not reconcilable with the observations in recent cases such as Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) and Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2) and, if I may say so with respect, appear to proceed on an unreserved acceptance of the views of Mr. Ellis and Sankariah, which appears to me to be an unsatisfactory basis. Even the unreported judgment of Sir Charles Turner is open to this observation. The question is one of great difficulty owing to the unsatisfactory character of the materials on which we have to base our judgment; but on the whole after the fullest consideration of the case in all the aspects that have been presented to us, I do not think that these materials warrant us in laying down the broad proposition that unoccupied nattam in this District is the private property of the mirasidars, and I am of opinion that the question should rather be decided on the evidence in each case and with special reference to user, which will probably not be found to be uniform. This was to some extent the test recognised in Natesi Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5), one of the latest decisions, and a similar course was adopted by Sir Charles Turner and the other members of the Full Bench who decided Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) as to the mirasidars' claim to swantantrams, which in effect involved their claim to ownership of the cultivable waste, that is to say, of the land in the village which they had presumably reclaimed to cultivation but had ceased to cultivate a claim which was at least as strong as the present claim to the unoccupied nattam. In this case, as in that, user must in my opinion be the governing consideration.

I may add that the preferential right of the mirasidars to cultivable waste, which is now well established, does not appear to me to be of itself a sufficient foundation for the general proposition that they are entitled to eject inhabitants of the village from portions of the unoccupied nattam granted to them by Government, though they may be entitled, as incidental to such right of preferential cultivation, to the allotment of sites on the unoccupied nattam, when necessary.

In the result I am of opinion that there is no general presumption of the mirasidars' ownership of the nattam in the absence of evidence of user, but that where user is shown, the presumption of ownership readily arises.

AYLING, J.—The question propounded for us to answer is as follows:—

“Whether, in a mirasi village, the mirasidar is entitled to recover possession of a house site held under a patta from Government."

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Slightly amplified I take its meaning to be this:—

Where in a mirasi village a person has been granted a portion of the nattam poramboke for use as house site by a duly authorised Government Officer, can the mirasidar by virtue of any right, privilege or title inherent in him as mirasidar disregard the grant of the house site by such officer, and evict the grantee from possession?

In the plaint the suit property is claimed by plaintiffs as absolute owners. How far this claim was intended to be based on the adverse individual enjoyment which has been found against by both the lower Courts is not clear: but I do not think it has been seriously argued by the learned Vakil who represented them in this Court that their interest in the property amounted to absolute ownership, i. e., ownership without restriction as to the way in which the property should be utilized. Such a claim would in effect only be supported on the theory that every inch of land within the boundaries of a mirasi village was equally and entirely the property of the mirasidar—subject only to liability to pay land revenue to the Circar. It is quite certain that no such claim has ever been recognised by Government or the Courts, even if it was ever advanced. It is not disputed that the right of the mirasidar to deal with various kinds of land in his village is clogged with various restrictions. This is clear even from the authority most relied on by appellants: vide Mr. Ellis' Report at page 184 of the Mirasi Papers. Tanks, roads, threshing floors and other descriptions of poramboke lands, not excepting the nattam or house site poramboke with which we are immediately concerned, can only be utilised for the purpose indicated by the description of each: while it is admitted that cultivable land can under certain circumstances be assigned by Government to a non-mirasidar and it has been held in Fakir Muhammad v. Tirumala Chariar (9) that a mirasidar cannot without the permission of Government break up immemorial waste and bring it under cultivation. Obviously then "mirasi" does not imply any general rule of complete ownership over all the lands of the village:

and what we have to consider is whether this power to evict under the circumstances contemplated by the reference is an incident of mirasi and whether it has been recognised by Government. That the latter is a necessary condition of enforceability has been laid down in the most trenchant terms by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a very recent case, Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (10). They say:—"Before dealing with the action which the Government of Bombay took in reference to this village of Charodi on receipt of these reports, it is essential to consider what was the precise relation in which the kasbatis stood to the Bombay Government the moment the cession of their territory took effect, and what were the legal rights enforceable in the Tribunals of their new Sovereign, of which they were thereafter possessed. The relation in which they stood to their native Sovereigns before this cession, and the legal rights they enjoyed under them, are, save in one respect, entirely irrelevant matters. They could not carry in under the new regime the legal rights, if any, which they might have enjoyed under the old. The only legal enforceable rights they could have as against their new Sovereign were those, and only those, which that new Sovereign, by agreement, expressed or implied, or by legislation, chose to confer upon them. Of course this implied agreement might be proved by circumstantial evidence, such as the mode of dealing with them which the new Sovereign adopted, his recognition of their old rights, and express or implied election to respect them and be bound by them, and it is only for the purpose of determining whether and to what extent the new Sovereign has recognised these ante-cession rights of the kasbatis, and has elected or agreed to be bound by them, that the consideration of the existence, nature or extent of these rights become relevant subjects for enquiry in this case."

Whatever view is taken of the origin of mirasi tenure (which is entirely a matter of speculation) and the privileges it confers, there are undoubtedly certain incidents, which have been claimed as attaching to it from ancient times, and have to some extent been recognised. They are:—

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

(a) The right to hold his maniam lands free of all payment of land revenue.

(b) The right to hold his patta lands in absolute ownership subject to the payment of such assessment as the State may impose.

(c) A preferential right to cultivation of all lands, which have been brought under, but have gone out of cultivation (seykal karambu).

(d) The right to certain fees (tunduvaram) on lands granted for cultivation to non-mirasi cultivators (payakaris).

(e) Certain rights over immemorial waste.

(f) Certain rights over lands set apart for various communal or public purposes; e.g., tanks, village sites, threshing floors, etc.

Now all these rights may have a common origin in the status of the mirasidar: but none of them necessarily involves another, and, as will be seen, they vary with the description of the land to which they relate. Each, as it seems to me, requires to be separately established: and recognition by the State, whether express or implied, is an indispensable condition for the enforcement of each. It may be argued that the existence or recognition of one renders probable the existence or recognition of another: and this indirect evidence will be dealt with later. But it seems to me more convenient to start with the direct evidence regarding the peculiar incident with which we are concerned—that is, the rights of the mirasidar as such over the village nattam.

"Nattam" is a particular variety of poramboke land. Poramboke is defined in Wilson's Glossary thus: "Such portions of an estate or village lands liable to revenue as do not admit of cultivation, and are, therefore, exempt from the assessment, as sterile, or waste land, rock, water, wilderness, site of dwellings and the like: also common land near a town: any place situated out of or beyond certain limits".

Nattam is the "site of dwellings" above referred to. It does not admit of cultivation and is exempt from assessment, not because it is unfit by nature for the plough (it is frequently cultivated licitly and illicitly), but because it is required and set apart for an indispensable purpose—the building of houses for the various members of the village community. Wherever the ownership or quasi-ownership lies, this overriding limitation is respected by both parties. The mirasidars do not claim to be entitled to bring nattam under cultivation except in the limited and special way incidental to the backyard of a house: and Government do not claim the right of granting it on patta for cultivation purposes subject to the payment of assessment. Such a course is in fact expressly forbidden in the Board's Standing Orders.

In fact the dispute between Government and the mirasidars as regards nattam practically amounts to this: in whom rests the right and duty of apportioning the unoccupied "nattam" so as to ensure its utilisation for the appointed purpose?

Now in deciding this question the plaintiffs, who are the parties seeking relief in this case, wish to override the general presumption of the Common Law of India that the ownership of all unoccupied land vests in Government. If authority be needed in support of this presumption, I may cite Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (6), Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (7) and Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara (11). In Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (7) Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., says at page 393 that presumably the free-hold in the soil of gramanattam or village site is in Government. He was of course speaking of an ordinary ryotwari village where no mirasi claims can be set up, but there is no doubt that the presumption of Government ownership applies to nattam lands in ordinary ryotwari villages, the ownership being subject to the important limitation above referred to. Even in this latter respect, it is not denied that where the nattam in an ordinary ryotwari village is in excess of what is reasonably required, Government may transfer a portion to "ayan" (assessed) and grant it on darkhast. I mention this specific reference to nattam in view of the possible suggestion that the presumption is inapplicable to poramboke lands.

The right of Government to allot nattam in ordinary villages has in fact never to my knowledge been questioned: and an elaborate series of rules has been framed for the guidance of Revenue Officers (vide B. S. O. 21).

(11) 3 B. 452 at p. 583 et seq; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 301

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The presumption has now been embodied in section 2 of Act III of 1905, and it is very remarkable that there is no mention of mirasidars among the numerous classes whose rights are specifically excepted. There is no reason to suppose that the Act was intended to put an end to any existing right; and the mirasidar might probably shelter himself behind the clause "all customary rights legally subsisting." But the section is important both as embodying the presumption in an enactment and as indicating that in 1905 at any rate the Legislature treated the peculiar rights claimed by mirasidars as on a different footing from those of jenmis and wargdars who are both recognised by name. The mirasidar has to show that his right is a "customary right legally subsisting."

This presumably involves proof of recognition by the British Government, which, as already indicated, is necessary to establish the right as legally enforceable.

As regards the recognition of mirasi rights by the State, the burden of proof undoubtedly rests on appellants: vide Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (10) above quoted.

It may not be out of place to refer to one other point in this connection. If the mirasidars are legally entitled to the right they now claim, it is of course the duty of the Courts to enforce it, irrespective of all considerations of expediency. But where it is clear that the right claimed tends to the prejudice of a purpose to which the property is admittedly dedicated, I think it is the duty of a Court to require very strict proof before giving a decree in its favour. In the present case, no one has ventured to suggest that the enforcement of the mirasidars' claims over nattam would not be gravely prejudicial to the village community generally.

Sankaran Nair, J., freely admits as much, and throws out a suggestion calculated to ameliorate the rigour of mirasi control. He says:—

"It may be that, though the mirasidars are the owners of the village waste lands and house sites, that claim is subject to the claim of the labourers and the residents in the village, and that, if the mirasidars happen to turn out a labourer from his homestead they are bound to give him other house sites."

But this liability is not recognised by the mirasidar; and is quite incompatible with his claim not only as put forward in the plaint, but as argued in Court before us. The B. S. O. provides a simple procedure whereby any resident of the village can obtain an allotment of vacant nattam for the purpose of constructing a homestead. The recognition of the mirasidar's claims would place the entire control of this unoccupied nattam in the hands of a small corporation frequently consisting of two or three individuals (three in the present case) or even a single person. How potent an instrument of oppression this may be needs no demonstration. It is so even now, when the mirasidars' claim has not been declared by the Courts, and the labouring classes have the support of Government in resisting it. In the latest survey of the condition of the District Mr. G. A. D. Stuart writes (section 12):—

"In Ekabhogum villages the mirasidars still use their claim to village site as a weapon against refractory sub-tenants or labourers, in the manner described by Mr. Mullaly in 1890. A typical instance will be found in village No. 15, Kannivakam, in the Chingleput Taluk. Here there are two mirasidars, both absentees, living in Madras. The wet lands are poor and are assessed at Rs. 2 and Rs. 2-8-0, but the resident sub-tenants have to pay Rs. 12 an acre rent to mirasidars. Their holdings are altered as often as possible so that they have lost all occupancy right. Their houses are mostly built on a piece of patta land and they have to pay rent to the mirasidar for each house site. There is plenty of vacant land on the poramboke village site, but the mirasidars have "forbidden" the sub-tenants to build their houses there. I explained to the sub-tenants that the mirasidars have no right to forbid them to use the village site, but they explained that, if they ventured to disobey, their cattle would be impounded. This is a form of oppression which is also mentioned by Mr. Mullaly. In this village all the waste land on which the cattle graze has been taken up and new stands in the patta of the mirasidar, so that the sub tenants are entirely in the hands of the mirasidars in this respect."

The recognition of this claim by the Courts would enable mirasidars, wherever they chose to unite, to practically banish from the village any person who incurred their displeasure, and would go far to reduce the labouring classes to the state of serfdom, from which they have been slowly emerging.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I proceed to consider the evidence directly bearing on the existence and nature of the mirasidar's rights over "nattam" and the recognition of these rights by Government. Existence and recognition are, of course, different things; but the evidence regarding both has to be dealt with together, inasmuch as appellants depend largely on alleged admissions by Government to establish the existence of the rights they claim.

I may say at once that up to a comparatively late period (about 1870) there is very little indeed either in the Exhibits in the case, or in the Mirasi Papers to which we have been referred or in the decisions of the Courts dealing with the point.

The minds of Mr. Place, Mr. Ellis, Sheristadar Sankarayya and Sir Thomas Munro were all concentrated on something entirely different—the question of the rights of the mirasidars in cultivable land. In the last years of the 18th and the first quarter of the 19th century this was a burning question. A reference to the minutes of consultation dated the 8th January 1796 shows that at that time, Government took a very extreme view of the relative positions of themselves and the ryots (including mirasidars). They say: "Though the inhabitants of each village may, from generation to generation, have cultivated the lands adjoining to it, yet the original compact is not changed by residence: they can establish no more 'rights of inheritance in respect to the soils' than tenancy upon an estate in England can establish a right to the land by hereditary residence, although the liberal custom of English landlords has generally given a preference to the ancient inhabitants, where a reasonable rent has been acquiesced in." "The mirasi inhabitants then bear the same relation as the other inhabitants to Government; and both of them establish by hereditary residence in a village not a right but a preference to the cultivation of the soils, the proprietary right to which is exclusively vested in the Circar."

These were the views that Mr. Place, and to some extent Messrs. Ellis and Sankarayya were combating in the memoranda and reports on which reliance is placed by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar: and although it is needless to say that Sir Thomas Munro in 1824 took a much more liberal and enlightened view of the matter, yet he was primarily concerned with the difficulties which the advocates of the mirasidars threw in the way of the introduction of the ryotwari system as regards cultivable land. In almost every passage in which these writers refer to waste, they clearly have in mind either land which has been cultivated and abandoned (seykal karumbu) or land which though never cultivated is fit for cultivation or could readily be made so, and to the cultivation of which by some person or other there is no objection on public or communal grounds (annadhi karambu). It has been argued before us that waste lands include all poramboke lands: and no doubt if waste is interpreted in the widest sense as meaning simply uncultivated, this is so. But in practice tarisu (waste) and poramboke are understood to be two different things—as authority for which statement I need go no further than the opening sentences of the referring judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., in this very case. I may, however, also refer to the foot-note on page 185 of the Mirasi Papers, which gives an exhaustive classification of all sorts of land according to the tirapudi accounts, which were maintained in those early days of the British Raj: and to the very clear and detailed explanation furnished in sections 69-71 of the minutes of the Board of Revenue, dated the 5th January 1818 (vide pages 373-4 of the Mirasi Papers).

Wherever either Place, Ellis, Sankarayya, Sir Thomas Munro, the Board of Revenue or Government use the term waste as including poramboke, they are careful to make their meaning clear: e.g., the answers of Ellis and Sankarayya to the second question propounded by the Board (page 184 and 219, Mirasi Papers). Mr. Ellis in a single passage (page 357 id.) uses the word tarisu in a special and peculiar sense indicating land which is neither annadhi karambu or seykal karambu, but "entirely barren and uncultivable." This "tarisu", he says, should like poramboke be deducted totally from the assessable lands of the village. He obviously has in mind such lands as are from their very nature hopeless for cultivation purposes, e. g., stretches of bare rock, which are now usually classed as "Parai poramboke." Having cleared such cases out of his way, he proceeds to formulate his proposal regarding the question then at issue, i. e., the treatment of cultivable lands.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I shall deal seriatim with the rare instances in which these early authorities refer to mirasi rights as applicable to poramboke land, including nattam.

Mr. Place's final report, which has been much quoted by appellants, leaves the question entirely untouched. His conclusions in sections 703 and 704 (pages 689, Mirasi Papers) are on the face of it concerned solely with cultivable land capable of paying revenue to the State.

Messrs. Ellis and Sankarayya, however, writing in and confronted with the question "Does mirasi right extend to waste land?" do refer to poramboke lands.

Mr. Ellis says (vide pages 184-5, Mirasi Papers): "In the terapadi accounts the lands are distributed according to their several (23) descriptions, either waste or cultivated, and the mirasidars must enjoy them as thus entered; on the nattam they must build their houses and nowhere else, they cannot cultivate or appropriate it to any other purpose; in the poramboke they have no right to fill up tanks, stop water-courses or obstruct roads; and so in other (24) descriptions of land, mirasi right is confined to the use of these as they exist. No alteration can be made with respect to them by the mirasidars; I mean that they have no inherent right to do so, but with the consent of the Sircar any beneficial change in the appropriation of lands may take place, and a correspondent alteration must be made in the terapadi accounts—thus, if part of the anadhi carumbu lands be reclaimed, or a road in the poramboke be stopped up and cultivated, the extent must be transferred from this head to that of varapet."

This seems to me to simply recognise the mirasidars' right of enjoyment of (e. g.) nattam for building purposes. It is obviously incompatible with any claim of full ownership; and I do not find anything to support the idea that their right of enjoyment extends to the exclusion of of non-mirasidars from nattam which mirasidars do not require for their own personal use.

Sheristadar Sankarayya's answer to the same question is printed at page 219. He lumps all porambokes (including nattam) in with tarisu lands and says they are enjoyed either jointly or severally by the mirasidars. Appellants are entitled, I think, to quote this as an authority in support of their claim. The sheristadar goes further than any one else in his advocacy of mirasi rights; but I am not satisfied that we should be justified in treating him as an authority of the first rank: and he does not seem to have been so regarded by his superiors at the time, with the exception of Mr. Ellis himself.

How far the Board of Revenue were inclined to admit the mirasidars' rights in nattam is clear from section 70 of their minutes dated the 5th January 1818 (vide page 374, Mirasi Papers):—

"The poramboke, or land incapable of cultivation, consists of rocks, public roads, the beds of rivers, tanks, and water-courses, the public ground in which the bodies of the dead are burnt or interred, the piracheri of suburbs of the village occupied by the huts of Pariah slaves and other outcastes, the lands on which the different village temples stand, and the site of the village itself, called in Tamil the nattam. It is in this last place that the houses of the landlord mirasidars are invariably to be found; for here, and nowhere else, are they permitted to build their houses. Various other pure tribes, such as Brahmins, weavers, merchants and others, are admitted to dwell in this place, and all, therefore, who reside in it are not mirasidars; but all the mirasidars have houses, or at least sites for their houses, in the nattam. Indeed their title to erect their dwellings on that particular spot and their right to control the affairs of the village pagoda, and to appropriate the produce of quarries, mines or fisheries are the chief privileges they possess in the poramboke, which, as here described, being incapable of being cultivated, is not liable to any tax."

The right now claimed certainly cannot be read into the privileges herein enumerated. They are stated to have a right of control over the affairs of the village pagoda, but not over the nattam. The latter is expressly stated not to be in their exclusive occupation. They are stated to have a right to erect their dwellings on that particular spot, to which might fairly be added as an inferential corollary "in preference to other people"; but there is nothing to suggest a right to exclude others from portions of the nattam not required for their own use.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

These are the views of the Board of Revenue and I can find nothing to indicate that Government, still less the Directors, ever troubled their heads about the matter. There is a single passage in the minutes of consultation, dated the 11th February 1856 (page 534, Mirasi Papers), in which Government remarks that Mr. Ellis shows that "the mirasi interest in land of different descriptions varies much—the highest degree of it being found in the case of the varapat and cultivable waste the lowest in the poramboke". I shall show later the utmost limits claimed for mirasi rights in cultivable waste do not extend to the policy of the dog in the manger which it is now sought to put in force as regards "nattam."

Sir Thomas Munro in his famous minute of 1824, of course, took a very strong view against the mirasi claims in cultivable waste; but he does not touch on the subject of the mirasidars' interest in nattam, though it is not difficult to see what his views would have been, had he had occasion to express them.

In the whole of these official reports, minutes and proceedings up to 1870 on the mirasi question, I can find nothing amounting to a recognition on the part of Government of any title in mirasidars to monopoly or exclusive control of the nattam. The views expressed on other mirasi incidents, which I shall come to later, certainly incline one to the opinion that had the claim been brought to their notice, they would not have recognised it. The most that can possibly be said is that there is no record of any repudiation of it, and whether this amounts to much or little depends largely on the practice actually obtaining in the villages. This brings us to the papers connected with the order of Government dated 16th December 1872, at which time the question first really came up for consideration. I shall return later to a few isolated instances in which specific disputes as to nattam had come before the Courts, the Board or Government previously. They do not seem to me very helpful.

The order of Government No. 1684, dated 16th December 1872, has been strongly relied on by appellants, and is undoubtedly a piece of evidence entitled to very serious consideration. In the course of it, the Government remark, "in purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belongs to the mirasidars, the gramanattam no doubt appertains to them equally with the other porambokes" and the Board of Revenue is instructed to exempt zamindari and mirasi villages and villages which are private property from the rules they were about to formulate regulating the grant of nattam land for house sites. An excepting clause was actually introduced accordingly in the Board's Standing Order and was not removed till 14 years later. These proceedings, according to appellants, constituted a distinct recognition by Government of the right for which they are now contending, and are, as their learned Vakil would put it, conclusive of the case.

A careful examination of the connected papers appears to me to considerably reduce the importance to be attached to this alleged recognition. It appears that in 1870 the question of the practice obtaining regarding the disposal of nattam land by Revenue Officers was brought to the notice of the Board of Revenue on a reference from the Coimbatore District. Reports were called for from all Collectors and these are summarised in the Board's Proceedings. For our purpose it is most important to note that it appears that in Chingleput nattam land was granted to all applicants on a fixed scale. This scale doubtless refers to the extent allotted, and strongly suggests that in this respect, regard was paid to whether the applicant was a pattadar or not, and to the assessment paid by him. This distinction is embodied in the existing rules (vide B. S. O. No. 21), and has probably always been observed wherever rules have been formulated. But there is no mention in

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Chingleput of any preference to pattadars, as in the adjoining districts of south and north Arcot; and it can only be understood that the village or Revenue Officers granted nattam land for house sites to all applicants at their discretion subject to this fixed scale without reference to any special claim of the mirasidars as such. The Board of Revenue proceeds to consider these reports and to formulate and submit for the approval of Government certain general rules applicable throughout the Presidency. It would appear that in some parts at any rate Revenue Officers had been unduly and unnecessarily interfering in gramanattam questions; and that it had become desirable to reduce this interference to proper limits. The Board remark:—

"The true view of the case is that gramanattam is the communal property of the villagers, and that the Collector can only interfere with a view to benefit the community, and when his action is consistent with the Common Law."

Much stress is naturally laid by the appellants on the phrase "communal property". It was at once repudiated by Government, who in their order substitute the following definition:—

"By immemorial usage a portion of every village is assigned rent free as a site for the dwellings of the villagers; but as the old hukumnamahs show the enjoyment of it is subject to regulation by the Government."

As a matter of fact, it is clear that the difference between the Board and Government was merely one of words. The action which the Board proposed for its officers as "consistent with the Common Law" involved precisely the same powers as Government claim at the present day. Its proposed rule I runs:—

"Unclaimed portions of the village site may be granted to any one resident or about to become resident in the village on a fixed scale, which must be laid down by the Collector of each district once for all."

Government approved of this; and added a more drastic provision insisting on the land being built on within a fixed time.

So far the papers are not only useless to appellants, but tell very strongly against them on the most important point of the custom, which had previously been obtaining. But in generally approving the Board's proposals, Government, as already stated, went out of its way to place mirasi villages on a separate footing. Why they did so it is impossible to say. The special case of mirasi villages was not raised by the Board, and it does not appear that any special representations had been made by mirasidars. If it is to be taken as meaning that in a mirasi village the entire area belongs to the mirasidars, this view is so utterly opposed to every pronouncement of Government before and since, that it is difficult to treat this isolated dictum unsupported by any reason as a considered and binding expression of policy. If it is merely meant that the mirasidars had rights in nattam just as they had in other porambokes, each after its kind, this is in accordance with section 69 of the Board of Revenue's Minutes of 5th January 1818 already alluded to; but it does not necessarily involve the idea of exclusive rights. Practically all that one can say is that in 1872 Government declined to sanction the application to mirasi villages of the village site rules approved for non-mirasi villages; and that if the mirasi claim now under consideration had been placed before Government as then constituted, it might or might not have been recognised in full, but it would in all probability have received favourable consideration and recognition to some extent at least. Government issued no specific orders regarding nattams in mirasi villages; but it is very doubtful whether they meant to abdicate entirely the control which had, on the very papers before them, been exercised up till then, so far as appears, without objection.

At any rate less than three years later when Chingleput District was settled, the Settlement Register of this very village (Exhibit F), which must be taken as issued by the authority of Government, contains a note with regard to building site (nattam) that "no new enclosure is to be made or new building erected without permission in future." It is difficult to reconcile this with the view which the learned Vakil put forward regarding the order of 1872.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I may mention here that although the purport of the latter order was, as already stated, embodied in the Board's Standing Order, yet it does not appear to have attracted the attention of the parties interested or to have had any practical effect on the situation. (vide section 8 of the Board's Proceedings No. 362, dated 24th June 1890, referred to below).

The next landmark is 1886, when the whole question in much the same form as that in which it now presents itself, came before the Board of Revenue in connection with an appeal presented by the mirasidars of Nemelicheri against a certain order of Mr. C. A. Galton, then Collector of Chingleput. The Board says in its Resolution No. 1547, dated 7th July 1886: "This is an appeal which raises the question of the right of mirasidars (in Chingleput) to the ownership and the full control of the gramanattam or village site. It appears that the mirasidars of Nemelicheri asserted this right over the land in the parachery of their village and did so by ploughing up part of it, by erecting huts without the permission of anybody and by ousting a Pariah who had occupied a house in the par chery for forty years. In their petition the mirasidars assert an absolute right of property in the parachery land or cheri nattam and a right to oust their farm labourers or apparently any Pariah from it.

2. The evidence they have produced makes it certain that they have claimed and probable (but only probable) that they have possessed this right in past times, but they cannot show that it has ever been admitted by Government."

The Board dismissed the mirasidars' appeal, but in view of the importance of the subject, reported the whole matter to Government, drawing particular attention to the G. O. of 1872, and the probability of a civil suit following on the dismissal of the appeal. The Board expressed a strong opinion that the Collector must be supported in asserting the right of Government to deal with the nattam and negatived the claim of the mirasidars to exercise right of ownership over any part of it.

Government, having had the matter thus placed fairly and squarely before them, simply recorded the papers; from which it can only be inferred that they agreed with the Board and were prepared to face the threatened suit. Had they taken a different view, they would certainly have issued orders to admit the mirasidars' claim, and so save litigation. No suit was apparently ever filed.

These papers clearly show that, whatever view the Government of 1872 might have been induced to take, the Government of 1886 did not recognise the mirasidars' claim.

The next batch of records to which our attention is drawn is that connected with G. O. No. 704, Rev., dated 3rd September 1890. In this order Government in the most explicit terms declines to recognise the mirasidars' special claim to nattam, and repudiates the view which it seemed to have taken in 1872. The G. O. says:—

"It is true that in 1872 the Government declared that in the exceptional case of purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belonged to the mirasidars, the village site would also appertain to the same body, but the opinion expressed was stronger in appearance than in reality, for it formed part of an argument, contesting the view of the Board that village site was the communal property of the villages and did not appertain to Government. In any case His Excellency the Governor-in-Council is not now prepared to subscribe to the above dictum. And it is observed that when in 1886, the Board challenged the correctness of the order of 1872 the Government allowed the challenge to pass unnoticed. The said order has thus practically become a dead letter, in so far as it acknowledges the claims of mirasidars to village sites, and in the revised edition of the Standing Orders the words 'mirasi villages' have been omitted from Standing Order No. 37 (formerly No. 39)."

It has been argued before us that the double entry system regarding house sites which prevailed in the village accounts of some, but not all, of the villages of the Chingleput District is itself evidence of recognition of the mirasidars' claim. This matter is fully considered by the Board and

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Government in these papers. I have no hesitation whatever in rejecting this argument. There is nothing to contradict Mr. Mullaly's statement that the practice was unauthorised by Government or any responsible officer and it was discontinued, as soon as it was brought to notice, and attention drawn to the fact that it might be construed into an admission of the mirasi claim. In the second place the practice itself is probably due largely, as suggested by Mr. Lee Warner, to the grant by mirasidars of house sites to their labourers out of their own "porunmanais." (vide section 5 of the Board's Proceedings No. 362, dated 24th June 1890). Now the rights of the mirasidars in these "porumanais" may stand on a very different footing to the right they now claim over vacant nattam. Although the porumanais may be originally misappropriations of nattam poramboke, the mirasidars may have acquired by prescription a valid title to them.

The whole question of the position of Pariah and low caste labourers in Chingleput and their oppression by the mirasidars came before the Board and Government in 1892, in consequence of a memorandum prepared by Mr. Tremenheere, who was then Collector. The views then expressed by both authorities were to some extent influenced by the desire to point out what they regarded as the exaggerated expressions of Mr. Tremenheere, but I can find nothing in either Board's Proceedings No. 584 A, dated 19th August 1892, or G. O. No. 1010 and 1010A, Rev., dated 30th September 1892, to indicate a change in the opinions and policy enunciated two years before. Government in fact reiterated its orders regarding the contesting of any civil suit brought to assert the mirasi claim to village sites.

The latest orders quoted are those passed on Mr. G. A. D. Stuart's Re settlement Report in 1909. These also indicate no change of view. Both Mr. Stuart and the Board emphasize the fact that the mirasidars' claim to all vacant nattam and to the power to oust any non-mirasidar (as now contended for) must be resisted; and Government apparently acquiesce although willing to transfer to "assessed" all porunmanais in which a prescriptive title as against Government can be proved or fairly presumed. The above appear to be the only cases in which the abstract question of the mirasi right now in dispute has been considered: and it seems to me that with the exception of the order of 1872 there is nothing that could possibly be construed as recognition by Government. For reasons given above I do not think this isolated pronouncement is of a nature to be treated as conclusive on the point.

It remains to consider certain cases in which the action of Government is represented as constituting (or at any rate supporting the idea of) recognition of the contested right and certain cases in which the latter is said to have come before the Courts and been the subject of adjudication.

Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has drawn our attention to a series of papers (Mirasi Papers Nos. 25 to 32) dealing with the payment of compensation by Government for certain waste lands in the mirasi village of Tondiarpet about the year 1810. There is nothing to indicate that any of these lands were nattam or indeed any kind of poramboke, and the fact that Government were prepared to pay compensation to the mirasidars for cultivable waste has no significance in the present connection. Whether such a claim would be admitted at the present day may be doubtful, but the papers make it clear that Government were not prepared to recognise any proprietary right on the part of the mirasidars but only what is referred to as "occupancy" right—by which I think is meant the preferential right of the mirasidar to take up and cultivate waste land (vide page 143), and that there was an inclination to show some special indulgence to the Tondiarpet mirasidars, because they had recently been evicted from their village in favour of certain Shanars, and thus prevented from exercising their preferential rights. I can find nothing in these papers bearing directly on the present question: and I do not think we have been referred to any case in which compensation has been paid by Government for the acquisition of unoccupied nattam.

The general question of the necessity of paying compensation to mirasidars for waste land taken up by Government was again agitated about the year 1856 (vide Mirasi Papers Nos. XCII and LCV, etc.), but here also only with reference to cultivable lands. The two papers mentioned, however, throw a great deal of light on the views prevailing at the time; and section 39 of the Government despatch to the Court of Directors dated 5th June 1857 (M. P. No. XCV) makes it quite clear that they were only prepared to pay compensation for cultivable waste on the basis of the value of the mirasidars' preferential right to take up the land. For the orders of the Court of Directors as to the limitations on this preferential right vide section 30 of their despatch dated 17th December 1856 (M. P. No. XCIV).

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

It is unfortunate that the reply of the Court of Directors to the despatch of the Government of Madras is not on record.

Since that time (1856) there seems to have been no discussion, so far as the record goes, of the liability of Government to pay compensation for waste lands taken up in mirasi villages. The only actual cases to which we are referred are two which came into Court. The first which will be referred to later as the Vyasarpadi case related to waste land, which at the time of acquisition, though not assigned by Government, was in the actual occupation and enjoyment of a man claiming under the mirasidars. The second, reported as Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), seems to be good authority for the proposition that in the case of immemorial waste compensation is not claimable by the mirasidars. It is argued that the decision proceeded solely on the facts of the particular case, but the first two sentences of section 3 of the judgment certainly seem to me of general application.

One specific case referred to in the papers of 1856 has been referred to and relied on by appellants' Vakil. It is dealt with in Mirasi Paper No. XCIII and also in section 37 of No. XCV: and although it arose in the Tanjore District it calls for comment. The case is a curious one. It relates to a plot of land classed as threshing floor poramboke in the village of Mamalore. The village was held by four sharers who called themselves mirasidars; and these sharers had divided the threshing floor poramboke among themselves. One of the mirasidars Rangappa Naik allowed one Narayanasami to put up a temporary house on 18 gulies of his (Rangappa's) share of the threshing floor: and this Narayanasami not only declined to quit when called on to do so, but obtained a grant of 40 gulies more of the same land from the Collector, and appropriated a further extent of 42 gulies in which he was subsequently confirmed by that officer. Rangappa having failed to obtain redress through the Civil Courts resorted to the Revenue Authorities: and both the Collector and the Board declined to interfere on the ground that the land was poramboke which Government could give to whomsoever they pleased. Government dissented from this view, and directed that the 82 gulies should be placed in possession of Rangappa, and that as regards the original 18 gulies, they should be entered in the accounts as his land, but he should be left to the ordinary legal means to oust the occupant.

There is no doubt that in this case Rangappa Naik had a genuine grievance. The land was set apart for use as "threshing floor," and the Collector had no right to assign any portion of it to Narayanasami. This, as Government pointed out in section 39 (page 555), could only be done if it had ceased to be required for the special purpose for which it was assigned: and in that case it would come under the same footing as ordinary waste, and the mirasidar would have a preferential claim to it. There is no doubt that Government at the present day would come to the same decision as Government did then, as regards cancelling the orders passed by the Collector. For the rest, the letter of Government undoubtedly contains passages which suggest that they saw no objection to the partition of the poramboke between the mirasidars, and regarded his share as his mirasi land with which he could do as he liked.

Appellants may fairly quote these in their favour; on the other hand it is possible that Government in its desire to refute the Board's argument as to the absolute right of Government in poramboke went too far in the other direction. I am not inclined myself to treat these expressions, possibly incautiously used in an isolated case, as good evidence of the determination of the Government of that day to recognise the mirasidars' private and complete title in poramboke lands; especially as we do not know what view the Directors took on this reference. It would appear from another despatch of the Court of Directors about the same time (M. P. No. XCIV) that they did not at all approve of the views of Government regarding mirasi claims to waste lands and were much more in accord with those expressed by the Board of Revenue.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Turning to the cases on the subject, the earliest to which our attention was drawn is a very old case decided by Sir Thomas Strange, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in 1808 (No. XXIV of the Mirasi Papers). This was a suit in ejectment brought by a person as the lessee of certain Vellalars, who claimed to be the ancient mirasidars of Tondiarpet. The defendants were certain Gramanis who according to the plaint were mere porakudis under the Vellalar mirasidars. Plaintiff alleged an ouster of his lessors by defendants in 1794 and alleged that his lessors had been driven out of the village altogether by the Gramanis with the sanction of the Collector: and the suit was brought to eject the defendants. Neither the Collector nor the Government was a party: and no attempt was made by defendants to justify the alleged ouster of the Vellalars, which the Court was inclined to regard as having been effected by the Collector's orders in consequence of the Vellalars' oppression of the Gramanis. The defence raised was that the Gramanis themselves were the mirasidars: but this was found against them. The only other question gone into by the Court was whether defendants were at the time of suit in possession of anything belonging to plaintiff's lessors, the Vellalars. It was found that they were not and the suit was dismissed. It will be seen from the above how little bearing the case can have on the point now under consideration. The property from which forcible ejectment of the Vellalars by defendants was alleged was the nattam (vide section 6 of the judgment): and this for a very obvious reason. This was the only part of the village of which they (the Vellalars) held actual possession. The cultivated lands were all cultivated by the Gramanis under them: so that there could be no ouster in regard to them (vide section 2 of the judgment). And by the nattam can only be meant the house sites actually occupied by the Vellalars at the time of the ouster. This is clear from section 37, wherein the learned Judge says, "Shall we say the nattam? It is in evidence that the persons whom they represent took possession of it for a short time, immediately after the ouster; but it is proved, on the part of the lessors of the plaintiffs themselves, to have been long since destroyed, the houses to have been pulled down, and the site of them to be now uninhabited."

The question with which we are concerned never, in fact, came under consideration in that case at all. There is an interesting discussion in the judgment on the nature and extent of mirasi rights generally, but it does not help us. Appellants rely on a remark in section 16 that "the nattam in which they lived including its adjoining backyards" was a material portion of the mirasidars' rights. I take this to mean simply the nattam which they actually occupied. If it meant the entire area of land set apart for building purposes, the reference to backyards (always part of the nattam) is meaningless.

Two decisions of the Sudder Court have been relied on: those in Special Appeal Suit No 108 of 1844 printed at page 483 of the Mirasi Papers and in Special Appeal No. 14 of 1849 (Decision of the Court of Sudder Adalat, Volume I, page 119). In neither of these was Government represented and neither is of any real assistance. In the first, which arose from Tanjore, the only question appears to have been the right of a mirasidar to evict a former porakudi from samudayam land which he (the mirasidar) had originally given him to build a house. The second is from North Arcot District and clearly relates to cultivable land. It has nothing to do with house site: and the general remarks in paragraph 7 of the judgment are of an obiter nature.

Exhibit N is a judgment of the District Munsif of Tiruvellore in Original Suit No. 33 of 1894, in which the sole mirasidar of Kathurvedu successfully sued Government for a declaration of his title to 3.32 acres of nattam land in that village. The decision is of course only evidence of one instance of successful assertion of the mirasidars' claim. Stress is laid on the fact that Government did not appeal against the decision: but this is explained by the fact that the plaintiff had clearly proved a good title against Government by sixty years' adverse possession, while the right of Government to charge assessment was recognised by the Court. Government had, therefore, no case to appeal on.

Lastly much reliance was placed on an unreported judgment of Turner, C. J., in Civil Suit No. 128 of 1882. In that case plaintiff, a vendee from the mirasidars, sued for recovery of 5 acres and odd of waste land on which he had built a house and made a garden. The defendant was Government who had ousted him, claiming the land as their own. It was found that plaintiff had a good title to the land, and, by consent, he was given a decree for damages in place of recovery of the land.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The land in dispute lay within Madras Municipal limits, but there is absolutely nothing to suggest that it was village site (nattam). The very size of the plot is against such a suggestion: for in nattam land 5 acres would under the Government system suffice for 50 house sites on the most liberal scale. The word nottam or house site is nowhere mentioned in the pleadings or judgment: and the reasoning of the learned Judge proceeds entirely on the assumption that it is waste land liable to pay assessment to Government on occupation. He decides that mirasidars have certain property in the waste, and that property enables them to dispose of the occupancy of the lands, subject of course to the payment of land revenue. This is a very important pronouncement, but it has no immediate bearing on the present question: and the case is not, as was argued, a direct authority on it.

I have above to the best of my ability summarised and considered the evidence cited as bearing directly on the right now in dispute. There is other evidence with which it is unnecessary to deal, e. g., various ancient sale deeds in which mirasidars have professed to transfer proprietary right in nattam and other poramboke lands. These, at most, amount to assertions of the right and I am very far from suggesting that the right now claimed is a modern invention. On the contrary I have no doubt it is an ancient claim which the mirasidars have asserted, sometimes successfully at the expense of the labouring classes in their villages—sometimes through the medium of the Courts, more frequently by force, and the exercise of the influence and dread attaching to their status. But the real question is whether this right has ever been recognised by Government, or declared by the Courts in such a way as to bind Government or to establish it for the purpose of the present reference: and this I do not consider to be proved by the direct evidence dealt with above.

It only remains to determine how far this direct evidence is strengthened, or plaintiffs' case rendered more probable, by the analogy of other rights inherent in the mirasidar.

The nature of the latter is set out in para, supra. Obviously nothing can be deduced from rights (a) and (b). No attempt has been made to show that the mirasidars possess rights over other poramboke lands bearing any analogy to the one in dispute. As regards (c) it is sufficient to quote Mr. Ellis (vide page 184, M. P.): "In the anadhi carambu, or immemorial waste, though they possess the exclusive right of cutting firewood, working quarries, etc., they have no right of cultivation, much less can they claim any to break up common used for pasturage, or to cut down productive trees, as palmyra, cocoanut trees, etc."

I do not think any argument could be based on this: and there is no evidence, so far as I am aware, to indicate that any such exclusive right has ever been claimed in modern times. There is no trace of anything analogous to it mentioned in Mr. G. A. D. Stuart's very careful and able report (dated 1908) except a claim set up in a few villages to an exclusive right to dig silt and cut grass in tank beds—which he says is not put forward very seriously.

There remains (c) and (d) which may be conveniently dealt with together.

(c) A preferential right to cultivation of all lands which have been brought under, but have gone out of, cultivation (seykal karambu).

(d) The right to certain fees (tunduvaram) on lands granted for cultivation to non-mirasi cultivators.

Now if it were shown that the mirasidars possessed not a mere preferential right to cultivate arable waste, but a right to evict any other person who had taken up such land under engagement with Government, and to appropriate that land for themselves, then it might be argued with some plausibility that they possessed a similar right in the nattam. I say "some plausibility" because even then, there would be a very vital difference between the two cases, or, to put it in another way, to render the analogy useful to appellants it would have to be shown that their rights as regards arable waste granted to other persons by Government extended far beyond their largest claims. It has been claimed that where Government has granted waste land on cowle to a non-mirasidar, the mirasidars up to three generations might come forward, take the land from him and cultivate it themselves: but by so doing, it has always been assumed that they would cultivate it themselves and pay assessment to Government. It has never been suggested that they were entitled to cultivate it free of assessment, or to keep the land waste and pay no assessment. Here the claim of the mirasidar to evict the non-mirasidar is coupled with no such liability. No assessment is charged on nattam (except in case of encroachments) and the mirasidar's claim is to evict the non-mirasidar and keep the site unoccupied and useless, until the non-mirasidar is prepared to acquiesce in the mirasidar's terms. This to my mind cuts at the root of any analogy that can be sought to be drawn for the purpose of the present reference.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

But, as a fact, I can find no authority in support of any right of recovery by mirasidars of arable waste granted by Government to another person. The Vyasarpadi case to which I have referred goes only to this length, that where the mirasidars have put a non-mirasidar in occupation of cultivable waste, Government cannot evict the latter, though they may (presumably) collect assessment from him. The very same learned Judge has ruled in Subbaraya Mudali v. Sub-Collector of Chingleput (12) that where the Revenue Authorities had granted cultivable land to a non-mirasidar disregarding the preference to which the mirasidars (in spite of a previous relinquishment) were entitled, it was nevertheless not open to the mirasidars to oust the person admitted by Government. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyanger seeks to dispose of this ruling on the ground that its correctness has been doubted by Shephard, J., in Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (3). That learned Judge was dealing with the conflicting rights of a jenmi and a tenant in possession and all he says is: "Notwithstanding the opinion expressed by Turner, C. J., in Subbaraya Mudali v. Sub-Collector of Chingleput (12), I think it must be allowed that a suit would lie to compel the Collector to settle the assessment with the real owner and not with a third person."

I am not clear what there is in Turner, C. J.'s judgment, which was relied on by defendants before Shephard, J., but I can find no reason for doubting the correctness of the Chief Justice's ruling in the present connection.

There is a Full Bench case, Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4), to which also Turner, C. J., was a party. The actual question before the Full Bench related to the mirasidars' right to tunduvaram but it must be noted that the first prayer of the mirasidar plaintiff had been for recovery of land granted to the defendant by the Revenue Authorities: and his relief was refused in the first Court, and the refusal was never appealed against.

This brings us to the subject of tunduvaram or swatantrams. The right of the mirasidar to collect something from non-mirasidars holding lands directly under Government has undoubtedly been recognised by Government and is so recognised even in the present settlement. The matter is very clearly discussed in sections 4, 11 and 18 of Mr. Stuart's report. It appears that in the course of Mr. Puckle's Settlement in 1875 the value of these fees was found to amount to two annas in the rupee of the Government assessment, and the amount of swatantrams at this rate was duly entered in the village registers. So far as Government is concerned this matter is concluded: though according to Mr. Stuart (vide section 11 of his report) the fees are very rarely paid in practice at the present day, and the Courts have held as long ago as 1875 that the right to collect them is not to be taken as a necessary incident of mirasi right, but has to be established by reference to the custom of each village [vide Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4)]. The fees, in fact, seem to be a sort of compensation for the waiving of the mirasidars' preferential right of cultivation and nothing more. Its recognition by Government has no bearing on the present claim relating to nattam poramboke which is exempt from assessment. Even if the analogy were held to be complete, so that the mirasidars could claim from the grantee of a house site from Government a small proportion of the assessment which would be leviable if the land were ayan, this would not support the right of eviction now under consideration.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

There is one reported case, which has been cited by appellants, but to which I have not hitherto referred as it stands on a footing by itself. This is Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5). The suit was brought by zemindar to enforce acceptance of patta by his tenants, who were also mirasidars of that particular village. One question for disposal was his claim to charge for water taken from a pond in poramboke land, as if it was water belonging to Government. The learned Judges accepted the concurrent findings of both the lower Courts, that in that particular village poramboke and assessed lands are generally the property of the mirasidars, and accordingly held the water not to be Government water. The decision was confined to the particular case: and in any event is not binding on Government.

I would answer the reference in the negative.

I need hardly repeat what I have endeavoured to explain at the outset of my judgment. I have considered the matter in its general aspect whether the right claimed is incidental to the status of mirasidar. We are, of course, not concerned with cases in which a mirasidar has, prior to the grant by Government, already acquired a title to the particular site either by previous grant or prescription, and sues on such title. Nor am I to be understood as saying that the mirasidars of a particular village are precluded from showing (if they can) that in that village they have acquired by prescription a title in the nattam generally as against Government, which would include the right claimed. But the mere fact that they are the mirasidars of the village neither carries with it such a right, nor does it even raise a presumption of the existence of such a right.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The question referred to us for decision is, “whether in a mirasi village the mirasidar is entitled to recover possession of a house site held under a patta from Government”.

The Chingleput District, in which the mirasi village in question is situate, is part of what was known as Tondaimandalam where village communities seem to have flourished with some vigour till recent times. A reference to the Mirasi Papers and the Chingleput District Manual shows that, under the Hindu Kings, nattams (villages) formed a close village or township, the whole property of which was corporate except probably the actual house site and its backyard in the possession of each villager. On the first formation of a village the rights of occupancy of the whole land comprised in its boundaries seems to have been divided into a number of equal shares or ploughs and allotted to the different members of the settling community. The affairs of the village were not managed by an official appointed by the Sovereign but by the sharers in common. The village or township and not the individual ryot was the Hindu revenue unit. The village boundaries seem to have been fixed and unalterable. At the earliest stage there seems to have been common cultivation and the net produce, after payment of taxes, was divided according to the shares of the numbers composing the village community. These villages were known as pasankarai. The lands seem to have been divided periodically but later on were divided once for all, the mirasidar enjoying the mirasi in his own cultivated lands without interference by his neighbours and a share in the waste and other lands not brought under cultivation in proportion to his share in the village. Such villages were known as aridikarai. Even in such villages, excepting as regards land appropriated to each mirasidar, the communistic principle seems to have prevailed. Though at first the sharer was not entitled to sell the land allotted to him without the consent of the other members of the community, the right of alienation was gradually established and the alienee acquired by the sale or mortgage a proportionate claim to all the incidents common to the village, as for instance, the right of taking up waste lands to be brought under cultivation, the right of quarries, fisheries, pasturage and taking timber from forest. When the sharers or mirasidars were unable to cultivate their lands in person, they had recourse to tenants or pyacarries who were called Ulkudies if they resided in the village and Porakudies if they were non-residents. In the beginning, the tenants were all tenants-at-will. The Ulkudies, by reason of long possession, seem to have been recognised as having occupancy rights. The Pyacarries, whether Ulkudies or Porakudies, paid the mirasidars a certain proportion of the produce, or a certain fixed payment which was known as Swamibhogam or Tundivaram. The name given to the rights of the sharers was called Cawnyatchi when they were non-Brahmans and Swastium when they were Brahmans. During the Mahomedan period we find the term "miras" coming to be used indiscriminately for all such rights.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The lands of every village were divided into (1) lands which the mirasidars held free of any tax payable to Government, which comprised poramboke or lands incapable of cultivation and tarisu or waste and (2) those for which taxes had to be paid and which were called either varapat or teeravapat lands. As regards tarisu or waste lands they were either anadi carumboo or immemorial waste or sheyca' carumboo or waste lands which had for some time been cultivated. As soon as either of the kind of waste was cultivated, it was classed as varapat or teeravapat. That part of the poramboke was called gramanattam which was the site of the village itself and was the place where the houses of the mirasidars were usually built. The cheri was the site set apart for the houses of Pariahs and other low caste people.

So far as the Sovereign was concerned, he was entitled to a share in the produce, which in theory was one sixth though in practice it seems to have been a great deal more. The whole village community was liable to pay the tax and, so long as this was done, it does not appear that the State interfered with the cultivation of the lands.

The origin of the rights claimed by mirasidars is lost in obscurity. I am unable to accept the theory that there was a grant, by the Chola King Anandu Chakravarti to the Vellala colonists whom he is supposed to have introduced in Tondaimandalam. There is nothing but bare tradition to support it and, as pointed out by Sir Thomas Munro in his vigorous minute, dated the 31st December

1824 (page 432 of the Mirasi Papers), the whole story is extremely improbable. The origin of the rights of mirasidars has to be sought in custom or usage rather than in a royal grant. There can be little doubt that colonists or settlers who brought lands under cultivation and thus increased the revenues of the State, were looked upon with favour and encouraged; and, where cultivable lands were abundant, the settlers on any particular tract would have had a free hand in expanding their cultivation and would have considered cultivable lands in or near the village as within the exclusive sphere of their influence. They would also have had abundant pasture lands for grazing their cattle, and forests for firewood and timber. So long as the State received its share of the produce raised, the settlers were, in all probability, given a free hand in the management of their internal affairs and encouraged in their enterprise by light assessments. A system, based originally on convenience and expediency, gradually acquired the sanction which use and custom invariably acquire in this country. The mirasi tenure is, in my opinion, more a customary tenure, whose incidents have to be gathered with reference to the rights actually proved to have been enjoyed by the mirasidars. So far as the rights of the Government are concerned, the question has not been free from difficulty. As regards the sites on which the houses of the villagers actually stood and the backyards attached thereto and as regards the lands which were actually brought under cultivation and treated as varapat or teeravapat, there can be little doubt that in course of time they came to be treated as the exclusive property of the villagers which they were at liberty to alienate as they pleased. So far as the waste lands are concerned, there can be little doubt that the villagers treated them as property which was capable of transfer in proportion to the extent of the cultivated land of the transferor but it is not shown that the Government acknowledged their absolute rights to the waste lands. I do not think that the records warrant us in coming to any definite conclusion on the question as to whether Hindu or Mahomedan Sovereigns who ruled over the Carnatic recognised the absolute rights of the mirasidars over waste or that compensation was paid for waste lands. No doubt Sankariah in his reply set out at page 218 of the Mirasi Papers and Mr. Smalley (at page 401) state that mirasi rights were purchased or compensated for when grants were made. There is also a reference to the practice in the report of the Inam Commissioner which is set out in Government Order No. 2343 Revenue, dated 23d December 1861. It does not appear that the lands were in those cases waste. It would, in my opinion, be unsafe to draw any general conclusion on the rather meagre materials before us. It, however, appears that, so far at least as the Chingleput District is concerned, mirasi rights were not interfered with to any serious extent during the Hindu and Mahomedan periods and that the mirasi system prevailed comparatively unimpaired when the District came under British rule. The following passage from the minutes of the Board of Revenue, dated 5th January 1818 (page 368 of the Mirasi Papers) is instructive. After setting out the mirasi tenure with its incidents as they existed when mirasi rights were in full force, they observe as follows:—"It is by no means, however, to be understood that this is the state generally of mirasi property in the present time. The severe and arbitrary policy of the Mussulman princes, which, notwithstanding their short and unstable authority on the other coast of the peninsula, so materially affected the interests of the landlords both in Canara and Malabar, proved much more detrimental to the mirasidars of the Tamil country, where their authority was of considerable duration, and their dominion was firmly established under the commanding influence of European power. It is well known that, by successive augmentations, the demand on the mirasidars of the Carnatic was gradually raised, so as at last very generally to absorb not only the whole of the landlord's rent, but in many places a portion of the farmer's profit also. Most of the mirasidars in that part of the country were thus reduced to a situation which, except in name, differed little from that of the Oolooddy Pyacaries or permanent farmers; and the Mussulman Government, by absorbing the whole landlord's rent, became not only the Sovereigns but the landlords of the country, enforcing in practice their favourite maxim that the State is the exclusive proprietor of the soil * * * * *. In the Chingleput

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

District also, which was ceded to the Company as a jaghire before the full extent of the arbitrary power and severity of the Muhamadan Government had begun to be felt, as well as in Dindigul, Madura, Trichinopoly and Tinnevely, the latest of their southern conquests, Meerassy, though greatly reduced in value, was found in a tolerably perfect state." I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar that, when the Chingleput District came into the possession of the East India Company, the mirasidars were recognised by the State to be the sole and absolute owners of the lands included in the boundaries of the village and that the only right the Government then had was to receive revenue. There can be little doubt that, by long usage and custom, mirasidars had certain exclusive rights and privileges over waste lands, but it does not follow that the rights of the Sovereign or lord paramount of the soil were ever relinquished in favour of the mirasidars. Even Sankariah, who supports the claims of mirasidars to waste lands, admits the rights of the State to issue cowles for the cultivation of waste lands if the mirasidars did not cultivate. In dealing with mirasi rights to waste lands he observes as follows:—"While, however, there is, as has been explained, a right of property to the inhabitants as respects their mirasu, yet, as this right is founded chiefly on possession, a paramount right to the territory, over which his dominion extends, appears to vest in the Prince; if, therefore, the mirasidar fail to cultivate, and loss thence accrues to the State, the Sircar enjoys and exercises the right to cause the lands to be cultivated and to issue cowles for that purpose." The right of the State to select a person to enjoy the miras and to confirm him in possession by cowle, if the mirasidar fails to cultivate or acts in any manner detrimental to the State, is also recognised by Sankariah and an instance is given where the Tanjore Rajah transferred villages by sasanam to non-mirasidars. In Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara (11) Mr. Justice West, in dealing with the opinions expressed by Mr. Ellis and the above passage in Sankariah's reply, observes as follows:—"There are many other statements to the like effect, and Sir Thomas Munro was undoubtedly right when he asserted that the Government had always asserted a right of disposal over the waste lands of a village." Though probably Mr. Justice West was not quite accurate in his remarks as to the effect of the replies of Mr. Ellis and Sankariah supporting the absolute proposition laid down by Sir Thomas Munro, there is very little to support the contention that waste lands, during the Hindu and Mahomedan periods, were treated as the absolute property of the mirasidars to which the State had no claim except for a share of the produce when the mirasidars chose to cultivate. They seem to have been the subject of reciprocal rights and obligations.

SESHAACHALA CHEYTY V. PARA CHINNASAMI

Whatever may have been the rights claimed by or granted to the mirasidars during the Hindu and Mahomedan periods, the real question is as to the rights which were in existence when the East India Company acquired the territories of the Nawab and the extent to which those rights were acknowledged by the British Government. The antecession rights would only be effective in so far as the British Government consented to their continuance after having become the Sovereign rulers of the Carnatic. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (10), the relation in which the landholders stood to their Native Sovereigns before the cession of territory and the legal rights they enjoyed under them are only relevant in considering what rights the new Sovereign recognised, either by agreement, express or implied, or by legislation. In the words of their Lordships, "the implied agreement may be proved by circumstantial evidence, such as the mode of dealing with them which the new Sovereign adopted, his recognition of the old rights and the express or implied election to respect them and to be bound by them."

The question under reference has, therefore, to be decided with reference to the reports of the various officers as to the nature and extent of the mirasi tenure, the orders of the Government on such reports, and the decisions of British Courts with reference to the rights of the mirasidars.

When the East India Company acquired the territories now comprised in the Madras and Chingleput Districts and proceeded to settle questions relating to the assessment and collection of revenue, three divergent views seem to have been entertained. One was that the Government were the absolute Lords of the soil and that the persons in possession, though for generations, were only in the position of tenants-at-will. Another was that the mirasidar had hereditary property in the soil which was good as against the State, and the third was that the mirasi right was only a preference of cultivation derived from hereditary residence.

When the East India Company assumed direct control and management of the jagir Mr. Place was put in charge in 1794 and continued in office till 1798. He started with the view that the Government were the sole and absolute proprietors of the soil and that the mirasidar was only entitled to "a preference of cultivation derived from hereditary residence, but subject to the rights of the Government as superior lords of the soil to do what it chose for the cultivation of the land." Acting on this theory, he seems to have dispossessed several mirasidars in Tondiarpet, a suburb of Madras, and his action led to a suit in the Supreme Court (to which I shall refer later on) which, though dismissed on a technical ground, was the first judicial recognition of mirasi rights by the Supreme Court. Further enquiries induced Mr. Place to change his views and to hold that the mirasidars had undoubted hereditary property in the soil. In the disputes between Mr. Place and the mirasidars the Board of Revenue and the Government seem to have taken different views (See pages 25 to 38 of the Mirasi Papers). Mr. Place was asked to submit a final report and he did so on the 6th June 1799 (page 38 of the Mirasi Papers) where he reported in favour of the rights of the mirasidars to the property in the soil. Mr. Place defined mirasi as "a right to the use and substance of the soil vested in the present proprietor, his heirs, and successors, so long as he does or can cultivate it and pays his dues of Government and is obedient to its authority and that, when he does not or cannot cultivate his lands, when he withholds the dues of Government or is disobedient to its authority, such part as he neglects or in the latter case the whole, escheats to Government who may confer it on whom it pleases." In 1806 a claim for compensation was made by certain mirasidars of Tondiarpet in respect of lands taken up for digging what was known as Clive's Canal. The Board of Revenue in their minute dated 1806 offered three pagodas a cauni as compensation and directed the Collector to inform the claimants of the right of Government to make any appropriation of Sircar lands, especially if waste, on commuting the occupancy right as may be possessed. Disputes arose as to the persons entitled to receive the amounts, and, on a claim being made by Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., the Board, on the 24th December 1810, addressed the Government on the matter. The view taken by the Board was that the lands were of little value and would not have been taken up by mirasidars if they were assessed and offered to them. They proceeded as follows:—"The refusal, according to the general usage, would have left to Government the option of disposing it in any other manner: for the principle of the absolute property in the soil being vested in the mirasidars, however suitable to primitive ages and institutions, does not certainly accord with the usage of modern times in those parts of India, more especially as relates to land, which neither is, nor, within the memory of man, has been in a state of cultivation." Mr. Ellis was asked whether the mirasidars were entitled to any compensation and, if so, to how much. He treated the first question as settled by the decision of the Supreme Court in 1808.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The introduction of the ryotwari system was authorised by the Court of Directors in their despatch dated 16th December 1812, and this necessitated enquiries into the various land tenures. On the 2nd August 1814 the Government requested the Board of Revenue to get the opinions of the Collectors on 28 questions framed by the Government as to mirasi rights. The most important questions were questions Nos. 1 to 4 which run as follows:—(1) How has the mirasi right hitherto been recognised and respected, where mirasidars were not the renters? (2) Does mirasi right extend to waste lands? (3) Is mirasi right forfeited for ever, when cultivation is for a single season discontinued? and (4) Where mirasi right exists, has it always been respected by the officers of Government in framing the jummabundy?

The replies of Mr. Ellis, who was Collector of Madras, were that the mirasi right, which he defined as "a general term used to designate a variety of rights, differing in nature and degree, but all more or less connected with the proprietary possession or usufruct of the soil, or of its produce", always existed within the boundaries of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, that it extended to waste lands, that it was not forfeited by non-cultivation or abandonment, unless the period extended to over three generations, and that it was always respected in the villages of Madras. In answer to the question as to whether the mirasi right extended to waste lands, his reply was as follows:—"Mirasi right, wherever it exists, extends certainly to waste land, but then the right is limited by the nature of the waste: the extent, entered in the terapadi accounts under the head of sheycal carambu, or cultivable waste, they hold as they do the general varapet, or the taxable lands of the village, and may cultivate it whenever their means permit, or rent it to parakudis; but in the anadi carambu, or immemorial waste, though they possess the exclusive right of cutting firewood, working quarries, etc., they have no rights of cultivation, much less can they claim any to break up common used for pasturage, or to cut down productive trees, as palmyra, cocoanut trees, etc. In the terapadi accounts the lands are distributed according to their several descriptions, either waste or cultivated, and the mirasidars must enjoy them as thus entered; on the nattam they must build their houses and nowhere else, they cannot cultivate or appropriate it to any other purpose; in the poramboke they have no right to fill up tanks, stop water courses, or obstruct roads; and so in other descriptions of land. Mirasi right is confined to the use of these as they exist. No alteration can be made with respect to them by the mirasidars; I mean that they have no inherent right to do so, but with the consent of the Sircar, any beneficial change in the appropriation of lands may take place, and a corresponding alteration must be made in the terapadi accounts—thus, if part of the anadi carambu lands be reclaimed, or a road in poramboke be stopped up and cultivated, the extent must be transferred from this head to that of varapet."

As regards the forfeiture of rights, he was

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

of opinion that the mirasidar was, by implied contract, bound to cultivate his full proportion of the warapet lands, according to the share he held in the village and that the Government could arrange for cultivation. If he failed to do so, he was of opinion that the State could employ payacarries for a fixed term, not an indefinite number of years, and in extreme cases could resume his mirasi swatantrams in respect of the lands he refused to cultivate.

I have already set out the reply of Sankariah on the question relating to waste. His view is that, as the waste lands are included in the Grama Taran, all such lands have been considered to appertain exclusively to mirasidars.

Mr. Peter, the Collector of Madura, was of opinion that the mirasi right extends to waste lands and that, if they are brought under cultivation even by a renter, the mirasidar is entitled to his share. Mr. J. Cotton, the Collector of Tinnevely, was of opinion that the mirasi right, wherever it exists, extends to waste lands. Some Collectors did not, however, go so far.

In 1816 the Board of Revenue had under consideration a scheme for permanently assessing each field in each village with money rent for the purpose of introducing the ryotwari system and wanted information as to the rights of mirasidars. Mr. Ellis considered the question as to what arrangement was to be made in respect of waste lands and he proposed to transfer the waste lands to the mirasidars (page 358 of the Mirasi Papers). The Board of Revenue in proceedings, dated the 24th July 1817, passed no final orders on Mr. Ellis' proposals but reserved the subject for future consideration. On 8th September 1817 the Board of Revenue sent to the Government a proposal for the introduction of the ryotwari system and observed that the Board intended to preserve the rights of the mirasidars by directing Collectors not to enter into agreements with persons, who are not, by hereditary or prescriptive rights, entitled to pay their dues directly to the Sircar. The Government, on the 16th December 1817, in reply to the Board of Revenue, stated that the ryotwari Settlement should not be attended with any infraction of the rights of mirasidars, or others in the soil (page 365 of the Mirasi Papers). In 1818 the Board of Revenue recorded a minute on the different modes of Revenue Settlement existing in the Madras Presidency. In dealing with the Tamil country they observe that "In every Tamil village the exclusive right to the hereditary possession and usufruct of the several descriptions of land situated within its boundaries was originally vested in the Vellalars, one of the principal Soodra castes of that nation, by whom it is termed cawnyatchi, or free hereditary property in the land". As regards waste lands, they observe as follows:—"The Tarisee, or waste land, is subdivided into the Anadi Carumboo, or immemorial waste, and the Sheycal Carumboo, or waste land that has at some time been cultivated; each of these consists chiefly of tracts of common, on which the mirasidars graze the cattle employed by them in agriculture, or of jungle, in which they cut the firewood used by them for fuel, and both are held free from tax. Should the mirasidars, however, possess the means, they are vested with ample right to extend their cultivation to these lands, though it is understood that the consent of Government is necessary before they can break up the anadi carumboo, or land that has never been under the plough; but the moment any part of either the sheycal or anadi carumboo is reclaimed, the nature of the land is changed, it ceases to be tarisee or waste, and no sooner is it converted into cultivated land than it is transferred, as such, in the village accounts to the head of warapat or teerwapat and in common with all land of that description becomes, for the plain reasons already given, liable to tax."

On the 4th November 1820, Mr. Smalley, Collector of Chingleput, addressed the Board of Revenue on the introduction of the proposed ryotwari Settlement into his District. His proposal was that a fixed toondooterva of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the gross rent should be allowed to the mirasidars as it was about the average toondooowaram which the mirasidars in that District were then receiving from the payacarries. As regards waste land, he fully admitted the mirasidar's right to it, if the mirasidar was able to bring it under cultivation: but in cases where he refused or was unable to cultivate, he proposed that the Government should let it to strangers reserving the right of the mirasidar to come in at any period within 105 years on paying the assessment to the person whom he wants to dispossess. The period of 105 years seem to have been the period of limitation in vogue according to Hindu notions, which fixed three generations as the period after which rights elapsed.

SESHACHALA CHETTY V. PARA CHINNASAMI.

On the 4th December 1820 the Board of Revenue passed proceedings on a reference by Mr. Hyde, Collector of South Arcot, as to the Settlement of that District. They observed that, though much had been said about mirasi rights in the Southern Provinces, it was doubtful when and how those rights originated, what they exactly were, and whether any Native Government ever admitted them to the extent claimed. As regards waste land they observe as follows:—"The mirasidar has also an interest in the waste land, and a right to a merah or fee, when, being unable to cultivate himself, he gets a tenant who shall cultivate it, and pay the usual rent to Government. This is fair; he has his fee for the service he performs; but if the mirasidar neglects or refuses to get a tenant for the waste, and the Sircar is obliged to find one himself, to keep up or increase the revenue of the village, the mirasidar has no right to the fee; it may either be added to the rent payable by the tenant, or may be given up to him as an encouragement to him to extend the cultivation. The mirasidars may have claimed more than is here allowed them, and more may have been occasionally granted to them. The Government has been, and ought always to be, indulgent towards its ryots; but when we come to discuss the principle, it will be found that any further legal extension of the privilege of mirasidars, particularly in the case of their neglecting to keep up the cultivation and revenue of the village, is contrary to common sense, and those common principles upon which every Government and society is founded." In dealing with the letter of Mr. Smalley, already referred to, the Board stated that they concurred generally in the opinions expressed by Mr. Smalley as regards waste and furnished him with an extract of their proceedings, dated 4th December 1820 above referred to, on Mr. Hyde's report.

It appears from the Mirasi Papers (page 419) that the Government approved of these proceedings on the 23rd February 1821.

On the 18th August 1824 the Court of Directors addressed a despatch regarding the Board's Proceedings, dated 4th December 1820, where they observe as follows:—"The right of the mirasidars to the lands which they themselves cultivate is in general indisputable, as is very often, also, their right to certain advantages accruing to them, apparently, as descendants of the headmen of the villages. Their right, in any case, to limit the property of the Oolcoody ryots in their permanent hereditary possessions, seems much more doubtful, and being hostile to the prosperity of the community, ought not to be allowed except upon unquestionable evidence in each case."

On the 2nd January 1822 the Court of Directors were of opinion that the question of mirasidars' rights ought not to be decided solely on the view which Mr. Ellis happened to entertain but should be decided after deliberate inquiry and full information.

On the 14th April 1823 the Board of Revenue passed proceedings on Mr. Smalley's report regarding the introduction of ryotwari Settlement in Chingleput. They authorised the Collector to give lands to others when the mirasidars refused to cultivate, and stated that the persons to whom the lands were given were not liable to be ousted but be confirmed in the possession of the land so long as they continued regularly to pay the rent.

In 1823 the Board of Revenue passed proceedings after they received the minute of the Court of Directors dated 2nd January 1822. As regards waste land they observe: "It has been stated in the replies from Madras, Tinnevely and Madura that the right of the mirasidars extends to 'waste lands', but what this right is, has not been particularly defined. The Collector of Madras observes that though the mirasidars possess the exclusive right of cutting firewood, working quarries, etc., they have no right of cultivation, much less can they claim any to break up common used for pasturage or to cut down productive trees, as palmyra, cocoanut, etc.' It is also stated that 'the consent of the Sircar' is necessary towards any beneficial change being made with the appropriation of the lands. It appears from the above that the Sircar has a right in these lands as well as the mirasidars, and the Board have now in view to ascertain whether the Government can, according to the ancient usage of the country, appropriate waste land for public purposes without making any compensation to the mirasidars further perhaps than the usual one which may be thought just and proper to make up for any loss they may sustain from being deprived of the use of common for their cattle, firewood, etc." The Board proposed to address the different Collectors as to whether the former Governments had the right to take up waste lands without paying compensation to mirasidars and whether in granting inams compensation was paid to mirasidars. The Government, however, passed no orders on these proceedings and no question was circulated.

SESHACHALA CHETTY V. PARA CHINNASAMI.

On the 31st December 1824, Sir Thomas Munro wrote his famous minute on the state of the country and condition of the people. His view was that the mirasidar, when he failed to cultivate, lost all interest in the property and that the Government may give it to whomsoever it pleases. As regards waste land, he observes: "Mr. Ellis does not seem to be very decided as to the nature of the property enjoyed by the mirasidar in waste. He admits that he cannot break it up without the permission of the Sircar. He does not say that he has any specific share of it, or that he can sell it alone without the cultivated land, or that he can do more than sell with his arable his right of common in the waste. The Sircar from ancient times has everywhere, even in Arcot as well as in other provinces, granted waste in inam free of every rent or claim, public or private, and appears in all such grants to have considered the waste as being exclusively its own property. * * *

* * * It has been supposed that in meeras villages in Arcot, in the original compact between the Sircar and the first settlers, the exclusive use of the waste was secured to those settlers: but it has already been shown that in all villages, whether meeras or not, the inhabitants reserve to themselves the exclusive use of the waste. But this right is good only against strangers, not against the Sircar, which possesses, I think, by the usage of the country, the absolute right of disposing of the waste as it pleases, in villages which are meeras as well as in those which are not."

These views represent, what I may call, the extreme views as to the Crown's prerogative and they do not seem to have been subsequently accepted in their entirety either by the Madras Government or by the Court of Directors.

In 1839 the Collector of Chingleput addressed the Board of Revenue with reference to the rights of the mirasidars in the whole of the lands within the village boundaries, and as to whether the mirasidars had authority to sell the poramboke and immemorial waste lands. His view was that the rights of the mirasidars over the poramboke and anadi waste extended only to the privilege of grazing their cattle on them when waste and receiving the coopatums when cultivated.

On the 15th August 1839 the Board of Revenue passed proceedings to the effect that the mirasidars had no right or authority to sell poramboke and immemorial waste land. They observed that the usual mode of proceeding for parties wishing to obtain occupation of particular lands was to apply to the Officers of Government to be placed in possession on their executing an agreement to pay the usual assessment, and proceeded to state that "the rights of the mirasidars over immemorial waste are confined to the pasturing of their cattle, the cutting of firewood, etc., and similar common privileges, but these must always give way to any proposition ensuring the extension and realization of the public revenue."

In 1839 the Collector of Chingleput addressed the Board of Revenue on the claims made by the mirasidars when lands were offered on durkhast and on certain irregularities which, in his opinion, were causing loss of revenue to the Government. In his opinion, the proprietary right of the mirasidars did not extend to immemorial waste lands and that they had no prescriptive right to oust payakarry cultivators from lands which were given to them by the Government owing to the mirasidars not having cultivated them. He, however, admitted the mirasidars' right to toondoo-varam, swatantrams, etc., in the sheikal lands and suggested that payakarry ryots, introduced by the Government, should be secured in their right of occupancy on paying to Government the Government dues and the mirasidar's fees.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The Board of Revenue in their proceedings, dated the 29th August 1839, referred to their proceedings of the 15th August 1839 (above referred to by me) and observed as follows:—"As regards the right of the mirasidars to the occupancy of waste, the Board of Revenue, though they have already recorded their opinion against the asserted right of the mirasidars to the absolute disposal of waste lands from which they have derived no benefit for a long series of years, are still inclined to believe that it would be proper, and at the same time consonant to usage, to give them the preference of possession when offers are made to bring the waste under cultivation. It should be the care of the Collector to ascertain that the parties offering for the lands possess the means to cultivate what they propose, and in these cases if the mirasidars decline to undertake the payment of the demand, the lands should be given to the parties offering."

On the 28th July 1841 the Board of Directors addressed a despatch dealing with the rights of the mirasidars to waste lands. At that time a suit was pending in the Zillah Court of Chingleput where certain mirasidars had sued the Collector and others for possession of lands granted by the Collector to non-mirasidars without their consent. The Court of Directors in their despatch make the following observations:—"Without entering upon a discussion of the respective rights of Government, and the mirasidars, over the waste lands, (a point still under the consideration of the Superior Tribunal to which the case has been appealed) it will be enough for us to state our opinion that it is desirable that, in all cases where payakarries propose to cultivate the waste lands of a mirasi village, their proposal should be, in the first instance, communicated to the mirasidars, to whom, in the event of their being willing to cultivate, or to give security for the revenue assessable on the lands, the preference should be given. We consider that the Government has a clear right to the revenue to be derived from the conversion of waste lands into arable, but we at the same time think it preferable that this object should be attained, whenever practicable, without causing the intrusion of strangers into the village community" (pages 455 and 456 of the Mirasi Papers).

The suit in the Chingleput Zillah Court (to which I shall refer later on) was disposed of by the Provincial Court on the 17th November 1841 in favour of the mirasidars.

On the 3rd July 1844 the Court of Directors addressed a despatch in continuation of their despatch dated the 28th July 1841. They directed that "when proposals were made by paracoody ryots for waste lands in mirasi villages, they should, in the first instance, be communicated to the mirasidars, to whom, in the event of their being willing to cultivate, or to give security for the revenue assessable on the lands, the preference should be given;" and they directed that on all occasions care should be taken that the just rights of the mirasidars were respected.

On the 11th February 1856, the Government was of opinion that the mirasidars had no right to convert immemorial waste to any other condition or to any other use, without the permission of the Government.

On the 5th March 1856, the Government in proceedings observed: "The village communities are certainly the parties entitled to occupy the land thus newly made available for cultivation, and they are quite competent to divide it among themselves according to local customs and known rights" (page 536 of the Mirasi Papers).

On the 14th May 1856 the Board of Revenue considered the whole question and reviewed the situation. They were inclined to the view that the mirasidars should have the option of cultivating waste lands of every village before strangers are admitted and that if they refused to cultivate the land they would have no right to receive any fees or rent from the persons to whom the Government had allotted the lands.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The question of the mirasidars' rights arose again in 1856 in connection with a complaint made by one Rangappa Naik, who alleged that he was dispossessed. The Board were inclined to the view that the land claimed by Rangappa Naik being poramboke was not part of the miras and that the Government could give it to whomsoever it pleased. The Government dissented from that view and in their letter to the Court of Directors observed as follows:—

"After a careful consideration of the case we are unable to concur in the Board's opinion of its merits. In addition to Mr. Forbes' testimony to the custom in Tanjore which in our opinion was entitled to much consideration, we held that the best authorities were agreed that in miras villages the miras extended to waste as well as to arable land. This right, we remarked, was not exactly the same in regard to waste as it was in regard to arable, as was clearly explained by Mr. Ellis; but in both cases it equally excluded strangers. The Board objected on the ground that the land in question being 'poramboke' could not be regarded as simple waste; but we remarked that land required and used for roads, the sites of houses, threshing floors and some other purposes, was taken out of the arable extent as not being available for culture and was classed with rocks, hills, etc., under the term poramboke, but that as soon as such land ceased to be required for such particular purpose, it ceased also ipso facto to be poramboke and became subject to the ordinary laws affecting waste. Holding these views we were of opinion that the memorialist had suffered a wrong in that his miras land had been given to another in spite of his opposition." (page 555 of the Mirasi Papers).

The Court of Directors in their despatch, dated the 17th December 1856, to the Government of Madras desired that in the disposal of waste lands the principles laid down in the despatch of 28th July 1841 and 3rd July 1844 (already referred to by me) should be followed.

Prior to 1855 the lands which the mirasidars actually cultivated were entered in their own pattas whereas the lands which they cultivated through payakarries found a place in the samudayam pattas. But subsequently the mirasidars were called upon to declare once for all how much of their pangu lands they wished to retain in their holding and were assessed upon those lands, whether they cultivated or not.

On the 22nd April 1869 special darkhast rules were issued for the Chingleput District. Rule 7 states that "the mirasidars shall have the prior claim over all comers: payakarries holding pattahs have the next best claim, and objections made by them will hold good against non-resident cultivators. Should the mirasidars oppose the application, and request that the land may be given to them in shares proportionate to their respective claims, their request shall be complied with."

Rule 13 enacts that "beds of tanks not hitherto usually cultivated, threshing floors, burning grounds, burial places, cattle-standing grounds, land situated within 10 yards of tank bunds and roads, shall not be given away on darkhast, and applications for gramanattam or village sites shall not be entertained."

In 1872, the Government passed proceedings regarding gramanattam lands. These proceedings were passed after a consideration of the proposals of the Board of Revenue and the replies of the Collectors of all the Districts. In paragraph No. 22 the Government observe that "the true view of the case is that gramanattam is the communal property of the villagers, and that the Collector can only interfere with the view to benefit the community, and when his action is consistent with the common law." They then proceed to state that a special enactment would be necessary to alter the state of things, that in purely mirasi villages, where the entire area belongs to the mirasidars, the gramanattam no doubt appertains to them equally with the other poramboke but that such cases are exceptional and that the Board will instruct Collectors to re-assert the prerogative of Government by making it known that except in zemindari and mirasi villages which are private property, sites on the grama.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

nattam are not to be appropriated without permission.

Till 1890 the village accounts in several villages of the Chingleput District contained entries where the mirasidar's name was entered and also the name of the actual person who was in possession. This system was known as "double entry system" and sites were described as "the site of so and so resided in by so and so." Mr. Mullaly, who was then the Sub-Collector, raised objection to this procedure. The Board in dealing with the question recommended its discontinuance but were fully alive to the difficulty of opposing the mirasidars' claims. They observe: "Undoubtedly the mirasidars have a great deal of evidence to support their claim, and if it is to be disputed, the strength of Government must lie in the fact stated by Mr. Galton in the Nemalicheri case, that Government has never acquiesced in it. If the system of 'double entry' now brought to notice for the first time is not stopped, this strong argument will cease to exist. Moreover, the Board thinks that the dictum of Government referred to in paragraph No. 6 of the Board's Proceedings of the 7th July 1886, No. 1547 (in Government Order No. 1684, dated 16th December 1872, already quoted by me) must now be contradicted or explained.

The fact that it is not mentioned by Sir Charles Turner in his judgment in the Vyasarpadi case (Civil Suit No. 128 of 1882), or in any of the petitions which have been presented to the Board by mirasidars, shows that it is not known to outsiders at present, but it may become known to them at any time and it reads as if it were a distinct acquiescence in the claim."

On the 3rd September 1890 the Government passed orders directing that the practice of registering the name of a mirasidar, as well as that of the occupant, in the house site accounts should be discontinued.

In 1892 the question of the mirasidars' right again came up for consideration in connection with the granting of sites to the Pariahs and other low caste sections of the community. The Board of Revenue sent up their proposals to the Government. In paragraph No. 9 of their proceedings dealing with the mirasi system the Board observe as follows:—

"Briefly, the system, as it at present exists, rests on the claims of the mirasidars to all the waste lands in their villages and to the levy of swatantram or fees from payakaries or non-mirasidars who may take up land for cultivation. This claim was fully recognised in the new settlement carried out in 1876-78 (vide Government Order, dated 15th February 1876, No. 221) and after full consultation with the mirasidars, a memorial fee (swatantram), fixed at an average rate of annas 2 on every rupee of Government assessment, was declared to be leviable by the mirasidars not only on every field lying waste in each village, but also on all lands now held by the mirasidars themselves and included in their pattas, should such lands be subsequently relinquished and taken up by a non-mirasidar. The fee claimable on each field was duly entered in the settlement registers against every field liable to it. The only lands against which fees were not entered were those which had already been obtained by strangers and which were held under lease or patta from Government. The absolute right of the mirasidars in the waste lands of their villages was finally settled by the Courts in 1883 when the Government was compelled by the High Court to pay compensation to the mirasidars of the Vyasarpadi village, near Perambur, for waste lands taken up for public purposes." After dealing with the judgment of Sir Charles Turner, the Board observe: "It is impossible at the present day to question the rights of the mirasidars. It is altogether unnecessary to consider whether the survival of these mirasi claims is due, as remarked by Mr. Tremenhoe, to the conservative effects of the decisions of the Mayor's Court of Madras. * * *

As forcibly remarked by the Board (Board's Proceedings, dated 1st April 1874, No. 754, paragraph 8, Board's Proceedings, dated 25th May 1875, No. 1415) 'the system is strongly rooted in law and immemorial custom. It is there and must be regarded in many respects neither more nor less than a great but necessary evil.' 'It is of great antiquity, 'is dearly cherished' and has existed with more or less vitality 'notwithstanding many years of persistent efforts to crush it.' " Regarding darkhast rules they observe as follows:—"In 1869 special darkhast rules (or rules governing applications for land for cultivation) were prescribed for the Chingleput District in which this preferential claim was distinctly recognised (Board's Proceedings, dated 22nd April 1869, No. 2710). In 1887 a proposal was made to assimilate these special rules to those of other districts in which mirasi rights are not recognised, but Government declined to sanction the change (Government Order, dated 21st October 1887, No. 6279, recording Board's Proceedings, dated 21st September 1887, No. 585). The chief point of difference between these special rules and those prescribed for other districts, apart from the fact that any land in Chingleput obtained by a non-mirasidar must pay two annas in the rupee of assessment as a memorial fee to the mirasidars, is that in mirasi villages the mirasidars have preference over all comers while in non-mirasi villages the preference is confined to those who own lands adjoining those applied for and to pattadars who take precedence over those who do not hold lands."

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

In dealing with the rights of mirasidars the Government observe: "The preferential right of the mirasidars to the occupation of the waste was deliberately recognised by the Court of Directors in 1841, after considerable discussion in which the views of Sir Thomas Munro quoted by the memorialists were duly considered." Then they set out Sir Thomas Munro's minute and observe: "Sir Thomas Munro merely dissents from the proposition that the 'exclusive use of the waste' was secured to the first settlers and that this right was good as against Government;" but that Sir Thomas Munro did not deny the preferential right of the mirasidars to occupation of the waste. The Government observe that "the question of ownership of Pariah house sites is one of legal right, and if the mirasidars have it they can only be expropriated by compensation; they cannot be deprived of their rights, however oppressive the exercise of them may be, by mere executive order."

In 1909 the Special Settlement Officer (Mr. G. A. D. Stuart) made certain proposals as regards mirasi rights. As regards mirasi tenure he proposed a fixed fee of two annas in the rupee of assessment of both dry and wet should be collected and paid to the mirasidars.

The Board of Revenue in dealing with Mr. Stuart's proposals resolved to omit from the Patta Settlement Register all reference to mirasi privileges.

The Government passed orders on the 19th October 1909 and in dealing with the preference under the darkhast rules observe that "it would not be equitable to go behind the arrangement made in the Settlement of 1877-78 recognising the preferential right of the mirasidars to cultivate waste." As regards swatantrams the Government observe as follows:—"The Government agree with the Board that all reference to swatantrams and miras privileges should be omitted from the re-settlement register and that the following foot-note should be substituted for the existing foot note in the memoirs on mirasi tenure:—"The right of the mirasidars to levy a fee at the rate of two annas in the rupee of the assessment of both dry and wet lands has been recognised by Government, except in the case of the under-mentioned fields which are free of swatantrams so long as they are held under the terms of the original grants."

I have set out in detail the various proceedings which throw some light on the question of the rights of mirasidars and on the attitude which the Government took up from the date of its assumption of control over the Chingleput District. It seems to me that, although the absolute right of the mirasidars to waste lands has never been acknowledged by the Government, their preferential right to the land has never been questioned, but on the contrary, has been unequivocally admitted both by the Court of Directors and by the Government. Individual opinions of Government officials have varied as to the origin and extent of mirasi rights over waste and as to the rights of mirasidars as against the Government. The preferential rights of the mirasidars to waste lands of the village have been conceded but there is a great divergence of opinion as to whether the mirasidars can as against grantees from the Government claim anything more than tunduvaram or the customary swatantrams. The Mirasi Papers also show that the rights and privileges claimed by mirasidars over waste have not been recognised in some districts and I find it difficult to construct out of the divergent opinions of Government officials, the Board of Revenue, and the SESHACHALA GHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Government Orders, any tenure with certain well defined incidents.

Turning to the judicial decisions on the rights of the mirasidars, we find that there is a tendency in the later decisions to require proof of the rights claimed rather than treat mirasi tenure as a well recognised tenure with well defined incidents.

The first case of importance arose in 1808 and is reported in Strange's Notes of Cases, Volume I. The suit was in ejectment and was heard by Sir Thomas Strange and Mr. Justice Sullivan. The plaintiffs alleging themselves to be mirasidars of the village of Tondiarpet stated that the defendants had trespassed and ejected them from the "nattam" in their possession. The learned Judges discussed the evidence as to the claims and privileges of the mirasidars and, while holding that plaintiffs were entitled to the nattam claimed, they dismissed the suit on the technical ground that the defendants were not found to be in possession of any portion of it. The Court, however, refused to adjudicate upon the rights as between the mirasidars and the Government, observing that it was unnecessary to decide how far the mirasidars' rights were subject to the intervention of the Government.

In 1836, the rights of the mirasidars as against the Government were distinctly raised in a suit filed by Ranga Ayyangar and others against the Collector of Chingleput and the persons who got possession under titles conferred by the Government. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the only mirasidars of Cannumtongul village in Chingleput District, that the Collector (1st defendant) granted permission to the defendants who were not the mirasidars of the village to bring under cultivation about 80 cawnies of wasteland, that the plaintiffs offered to cultivate the whole of the wasteland amounting to about 164 cawnies and in anticipation of sanction cleared about 60 cawnies for cultivation, and that the plaintiffs were dispossessed by the other defendants acting under the orders of the Collector. The defendants defended the suit on the ground that the land was waste and that the Collector could grant cowle to any person for bringing it under cultivation. The plaintiffs filed a reply alleging that neither the Government nor the Collector had any power to grant waste lands without the consent of the mirasi inhabitants, that waste land could not be given to strangers for cultivation without receiving a razinamah from the mirasidars and that they applied for the cultivation of the whole of the waste land when they heard that strangers had applied for it. A number of witnesses were examined and documents filed and the Chingleput Court (Udalut Court) passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The Court held that the evidence showed that the plaintiffs were the mirasidars and that the defendants had no mirasi rights in the village. As regards the rights of mirasidars the Judge observes as follows:—"That the mirasidars alone have a right to sell and mortgage warraput land, and that to every mirasi share there is a certain portion of waste land attached, but that the particular parts of the waste land which belong to each individual mirasi share are not usually known because those waste lands are seldom, if ever, divided, are facts which have been established by the evidence of witnesses in numberless cases before this Court; and as no one ever attempted to dispute the inherent right of mirasidars to the waste land, it is evident that without the consent of the proprietors of the soil, the Collector has no authority to deliver any part of these lands to other persons. In this case it appears that the 7th defendant and others gave their proposals on the 2nd May 1835; this circumstance was not communicated to the plaintiffs, but they on the 4th May 1835 sent in proposals for 40 cawnies; but after this on hearing of the proposal made by the 7th defendant and others, they, on the 21st May 1835, gave in an agreement to the Tahsildar, plaintiffs' document No. 50, promising to take all the waste lands in the village at the full teervah and to give security for the performance of their contract. On the 15th June 1835 the Collector grants the cowle to the 7th defendant and others, in doing which the Judge is of opinion the Collector acted contrary to the acknowledged right of the plaintiffs." The cowle granted to the 7th defendant and others was annulled and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. An appeal was filed to the Provincial Court by the Collector but the decision of the lower Court was affirmed on 17th November 1841. The Appellate Court considered that the only question for determination was whether the Government had power to grant waste lands in mirasi villages to strangers without first obtaining the consent of the mirasidars, and decided that the Government had no such power. No appeal was filed by the Government against this decision and the Board of Directors referred to this case in their Despatch, dated the 3rd July 1844, already referred to by me (see pages 456 to 469 of the Mirasi Papers).

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

In 1848 the plaintiff, who was a mirasidar, sued to recover arrears of swatantrams due to him for certain lands cultivated by the defendants. The defendants denied the right of the mirasidar to levy such swatantrams claimed and alleged that the lands for which they were claimed had been left waste from time immemorial by mirasidars who declined to take them up and that the Government thereupon rented the lands to them. The suit was dismissed by the Sudder Ameen on the ground that the land in question was immemorial waste not forming part of the plaintiff's share, that the defendants held it not from the mirasidars but from the Government, that in the cowle granted to them there was no stipulation that they were to pay any swatantrams to mirasidars, and that it was not customary to pay swatantrams in such cases. An appeal was filed and the Civil Judge decided that mirasidars had no right to levy swatantrams from paycarries who did not hold from them but under cowles granted by Government for lands which were classed immemorial waste.

The previous decision of 1844 does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Court and the remark of the Judge that the question has been frequently decided in the negative does not seem to be accurate. The Judge seems to have been of opinion that, where the mirasidars fail to cultivate the lands and the Government exercises its right of granting cowles to third persons, the mirasidars are not entitled to claim any perquisites from the grantee. (See pages 435 and 486 of the Mirasi Papers).

In 1844 a suit was filed in the Kumbakonam Munsif's Court by a mirasidar to recover a piece of samudayam land from the defendants on the ground that the land was within his mirasi and was let to the defendants and that they failed to pay the rent. The defendants pleaded that the ground was casawurgum, that they built a house and lived in it for several years paying taxes to the Government and that the plaintiff had nothing to do with the land. The District Munsif decided the suit in favour of the plaintiff, and on appeal the Sudder Udalt Court confirmed the judgment of the Munsif and observed as follows:—"It is clear that the land in dispute is within the mirasi of the plaintiff and, therefore, in disposing of the question at issue it will be necessary to consider the privileges of the mirasidars, the customs of the province, and the grounds on which the defendants claim to continue the occupation of the ground. The mirasidars are the acknowledged hereditary proprietors of the soil. Those in Tanjore and other Districts in which mirasi right is recognised allow their paracutis or under-tenants and others to erect houses on their mirasi lands, but their doing so, neither destroys the mirasidars' right to the lands, nor does it transfer the right to the paracutis. So long as the paracutis cultivate the mirasidars' lands, they are entered in the accounts as paracutis, but on ceasing to do so, they are called casawurgums, which the appellants admit that they are. This change of denomination, however, does not in any way affect the relative position of the parties, and the assertion of the appellants that as casawurgums they are independent of the mirasidar, is not correct. On the contrary, the custom of the province is that, if a paracutis ceases to cultivate and becomes a casawurgum, the mirasidar requires him to pay rent for a portion of his backyard which he would not do if he remained a paracutis." (See pages 437 and 483 of the Mirasi Papers).

In 1850 the Sudder Court decided that swamibhogam should be paid to the mirasidar by a tenant let in by Government. (Sudder Court Decisions, Volume I, 1850, page 119).

In 1857 the Sudder Udalt Court held that ulkudies had a right to sublet the lands they occupied and that the mirasidars were not entitled to eject the sub-lessees (see page 577 of the Mirasi Papers).

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

In 1860 the Sudder Udalt Court decided that where a mirasidar desired to eject a casawurgam tenant who had been in possession of the property for a long time and had erected substantial buildings, the mirasidar was bound to compensate him for the value of the buildings (see page 585 of the Mirasi Papers).

In 1861 the Sudder Court held that, where lands were abandoned and left waste by the original cultivators, they were at the disposal of the revenue authorities and that the former occupants had no title to eject the parties who may have been placed subsequently in possession in accordance with the rules of the District and established usage (see page 590 of the Mirasi Papers).

A similar view was taken in Punniakoti Mudali v. Munisami (13).

In Muniappa Mudali v. Kesturi Ranga Chariar (14) it was held that in mirasi villages the mirasidars possessed the proprietary right in samudayam lands.

In Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Gaundan (4) the right of the mirasidars to recover swatantrams was raised. The plaintiff, as the sole mirasidar, sued to recover possession of lands and arrears of thoondutirwa and thoonduvarakuppatham. The lands were granted to the defendant by the Revenue Officer, but it was not clear whether the mirasidar had applied for the lands before the grant to the defendant. The first Court dismissed the suit in so far as it related to ejectment but passed a decree awarding the thoondutirwa claimed. The District Court was of opinion that the plaintiff, by omitting to take a revenue engagement for the lands, had relinquished his mirasi rights and reversed the decree of the lower Court. The High Court at first held that, though the omission of the mirasidar to cultivate might empower the revenue authorities to introduce a cultivator, it did not further prejudice the prescriptive rights of the mirasidar and that those rights would not be lost by the mirasidar's declining to receive a patta for the lands. A review of the judgment was allowed and the case was re argued.

A Full Bench of the High Court considered the reports of the Collectors set out in the Mirasi Papers and the orders of the Board of Revenue and the Government and was of opinion that from the variety of opinions expressed they could not lay down as a uniform rule that mirasidars were entitled to dues from cultivators holding lands within the area of the mirasi estate under pattas from Government. They were of opinion that, where the right was denied, there should be enquiry whether by custom it prevails on the estate or if there are not sufficient instances on the estate to afford grounds for a decision on similar estates in the neighbourhood. A finding was called for on the following issue: "Is the mirasidar entitled, by the custom of the estate or neighbourhood, to demand payment of any, and, if any, what dues from ryots cultivating, under pattas from the Government, lands for which the mirasidar has refused to engage?"

Though it is expressly stated in the judgment that there has been no law depriving the mirasidars of any privileges they may have customarily enjoyed, their Lordships after a survey of various Government orders and opinions of officials were not prepared to lay down any general rule as to the rights of mirasidars but left the matter to be decided on evidence in each locality. This decision marks an important departure from the attitude taken up by Courts previously and makes usage in each locality the criterion for coming to any conclusion as regards the rights of mirasidars.

In 1882 the rights of the mirasidars as against the Government came directly in question in respect of a piece of land within the mirasi village of Vyasarpadi. The plaintiff alleged that the mirasidars of Vyasarpadi sold a portion of waste land situated in their mirasi estate to him, that he was in possession of the same, and that about the 26th April 1881 the Officiating Superintendent of the Gun Powder Factory, acting on behalf of and under instructions from Government, wrongfully took possession of the land and ejected him. The plaintiff claimed to recover possession of the land and also compensation. The Secretary of State for India filed a written statement pleading that the land was the property of the East India Company and subsequently became the property of the defendant and was in possession of the (13) Sudder Court Decisions (1862) p. 2.

(14) Sudder Court Decisions (1862) p. 50.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Government, that some persons erected a hut on the land and planted a hedge and in so doing committed trespass and that, after being warned to remove the said hut and hedge, they were removed by officers of Government. The suit came on for hearing before Sir Charles Turner sitting on the Original Side of the High Court and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The question for determination was whether by the Customary Law mirasidars had any title to the waste lands within the area of the mirasi estate. With reference to mirasi rights to waste, Sir Charles Turner observes as follows:—"One question constantly occurring was the rights of the mirasidar to waste. The better opinion appeared to be that he had a right to the waste, even though he paid no revenue for it, but that if he omitted to cultivate what was cultivable by paikarries, the Government might issue pattas to strangers for its cultivation. There resulted a long struggle between the mirasidars and the Government, the former unable to cultivate and unwilling to pay assessment on much of the land over which they claimed rights and on the other hand resisting the introduction of strangers. When pattas were granted to strangers, the mirasi right was not altogether lost and in some villages the mirasidars succeeded in obtaining from the ryots introduced by Government recognition of their interest in the soil by the payment of small cesses." After referring to the state of things in Bengal where a satisfactory solution had been arrived at by the Regulation VII of 1822, he observes as follows:—"From the authorities I have consulted in this and other cases which have come before the Court, I hold that mirasidars have in this part of the Presidency certain property in the waste and that property enables them to dispose of the occupancy of the land subject, of course, to the payment of revenue and that this property is not necessarily lost by non-payment of revenue. I need not refer to any further authority than the replies made by Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sankariah who was for many years sheristadar in the Huzur Cutcherry of Madras."

In Subbaraya Mudali v. Sub-Collector of Chingleput (12) the question of the mirasidars' right was considered. The plaintiffs, as mirasidars of the village of Vallipuram in the Chingleput District, alleged that strangers made a darkhast for certain lands in their village, that they objected to such a grant and claimed that a patta should be issued in their own names and that the lands should be put in their possession. The defendants pleaded that the lands, although formerly held in common by the mirasidars of the village, were subsequently relinquished, that it was competent for the revenue authorities to arrange for the cultivation of the lands without reference to the former registered pattadars, that the lands were unoccupied waste at the disposal of the Government when they were assigned to the defendants and that the Civil Courts could not take cognizance of the suit. The District Munsif held that the mirasidars had a preferential right to the lands and that the grant of a patta to the 2nd and 3rd defendants was invalid and that the Civil Courts had jurisdiction. The District Judge held that the Court had no power to order the revenue authorities to transfer the registry of lands from one person's name to another and that, if the mirasidars could be shown to have formally relinquished the plaint lands or acquiesced in such relinquishment by the former pattadars acting as their representatives, they had no cause of action against any of the defendants. Holding that the claim of the plaintiffs was one which the Government was bound to recognise, he was of opinion that the plaintiffs had relinquished the lands and had no proprietary right to them. Sir Charles Turner was of opinion that, where a mirasidar ceases to cultivate waste lands within his mirasi estate, or neglects to cultivate cultivable waste, the Government is at liberty to issue pattas to those lands to any stranger who will undertake to pay the assessment and that where there has been a mere relinquishment of the revenue engagement by the mirasidar he does not lose his mirasi right. He was also of opinion that a Civil Court cannot compel the revenue authorities to make settlement with a particular person where the mirasidars had abandoned their engagement and so given occasion to the revenue authorities to offer engagements to others. Mr. Justice Innes was of opinion that the mirasidars had abandoned their right and that the Collector was consequently empowered to grant the lands to strangers. Where, however, the relinquishment was not absolute but only for a period he was of opinion that, until the lands were sold for arrears of revenue, the Collector would have no power to dispossess the mirasidars absolutely. This case seems to have proceeded on the footing that a relinquishment by the mirasidars confers absolute power to Collectors to grant the lands to others and that the mirasidars cannot subsequently lay any claim against the persons to whom the lands have been granted by the Government.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

The view of Sir Charles Turner that it was open to the Collector to introduce strangers if the mirasidar does not pay the Government dues was considered and dissented from in Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (3), where it was held that the only remedy was a sale of the holding for arrears of revenue and that the Government had no right to let in any new pattadar without having recourse to the remedies prescribed by Act II of 1864. Mr. Justice Shephard dissented from the view expressed by Sir Charles Turner and held that a suit would lie to compel the Collector to settle the assessment with the real owner and not with a third person. In dealing with the rights of jenmies in Malabar he compares them to those of mirasidars and observes as follows:—"The rights of the jenmi are certainly not less extensive than those of the mirasidar with which they have often been compared (see Mirasi Papers, page 434, and Appendix I). Yet the mirasidar is generally entitled to a prior right to undertake the cultivation and consequent assessment, Fakir Muhammad v. Tirumala Chari (9), Mirasi Papers, page 219, and he does not lose any prescriptive rights he may have by the fact that patta is given to another, Subbaraya Mudali v. Sub-Collector of Chingleput (12)." Mr. Justice Shephard evidently thought that Subbaraya Mudali v. Sub-Collector of Chingleput (12) was in favour of the mirasidars' preferential right.

In Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) the dispute was between shrotriendars and mirasidars in respect of compensation awarded by the Government for lands taken up under the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894. The lands taken up were immemorial waste or jungle lands and the compensation amount represented the rent for the occupation of the land for five years as an artillery range and the value of the trees removed from it. The District Judge was of opinion that the shrotriendars were entitled to compensation as the evidence showed that they were actually exercising their rights as owners of the land in question and leasing out those uncultivated lands on long leases. Mr. Justice Davies and Mr. Justice Benson were of opinion that the only question was whether as mirasidars they were entitled to compensation for immemorial waste lands taken up under the Land Acquisition Act, and observed that there was no allegation or evidence that such a right had ever been claimed or established against Government in villages where Government had not alienated its right to third parties. They observe as follows:—"The rights of the mirasidars over immemorial waste (apart from their preferential right to cultivate) appear to be confined to grazing, cutting firewood and similar common privileges, as stated by the Board of Revenue in the passage quoted in this Court's judgment in Sakkaji Rau v. Latchmana Ganadan (4), but those rights were liable to be extinguished by the Government alienating the land. As already remarked there is nothing to show that the Government has ever treated the mirasidars as entitled to compensation for such curtailment of their communal rights. The shrotriendars stand in the place of Government in this case, and the evidence is that they have from time to time leased portions of the waste lands of the village to the mirasidars of the village, and sometimes to strangers without giving the mirasidars a share of the rent or other compensation. There is, moreover, the recent admission of one of the leading mirasidars, who is also an appellant, that in the village the 'poramboke' lands belong to the shrotriendars: the 'tarisa' or uncultivated lands which are not in the holding of anybody else do also belong to the shrotriendars only' (Exhibit B)." Govindarajulu Naidu v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu, Appeal Suit No. 76 of 1891, where the mirasidars were allowed a part of the compensation given for land taken up under the Land Acquisition Act, was distinguished on the ground that the facts were different.

From the facts appearing in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1) it is clear that the shrotriendars and not the mirasidars were proved to have exercised acts of ownership on the land. The observations of their Lordships that the Government never treated the mirasidars as entitled to compensation for the abandonment of communal rights is not correct. The Mirasi Papers and the judgment of Sir Charles Turner in the Vyasarpadi case show that compensation was awarded by the Government not only under decrees of Court but also out of Court. The decisions of the Sudder Court and the Provincial Court of Chingleput, where the claims of the mirasidars have been distinctly recognised over waste land and where strangers introduced by Government have been ejected at the instance of the mirasidars, have not been noticed. Though the judgment is perfectly intelligible on the facts found that the shrotriendars exercised acts of ownership over the land and the mirasidars admitted their rights, I am unable to follow it where the broad proposition was laid down that the rights of the mirasidars were liable to be extinguished simply by the fact that the Government gave pattas to third persons.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

Mr. Justice Benson, who was a party to Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5), expressly states in his judgment, when referring to Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), that the decision proceeded on the facts proved in evidence as to the particular village and does not lay down as a matter of law that poramboke lands in villages such as this in Chingleput District must necessarily be held to be the property of the zemindar.

In Secretary of State v. Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2), a question arose as to the rights of the Government as regards forests and immemorial waste in South Canara District. This case has nothing to do with the mirasi rights in Chingleput District and, so far as the present question is concerned, it is only authority for the position that there is a general presumption in law that waste lands belong to Government. At page 282 there is the following observation:—“Mr. Ellis compared the land tenures in Canara to those in the Arudi Karai villages to the South of the Coleroon on the East Coast, where the right of Government to the waste lands has now, after protracted contest, been established as against the mirasidars.” No reference has been made to any authority to establish the broad proposition laid down. I agree with Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair in holding that, with the exception of the observation in Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), which is explained in Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) as having been decided not on any general principles of law but with reference to the facts of the particular case, there is no authority for the above observation, and that it should be treated merely as an obiter dictum.

In Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (5) the question arose as to whether a second crop raised with water from certain ponds in poramboke or unassessed lands in the village was liable to any claim for rent by the zemindar. Both the Revenue Courts before whom the suit came on and the District Court on appeal found that in that village of the Chingleput District, poramboke or unassessed lands were generally the property of the mirasidars. The High Court accepting the finding decided in favour of the mirasidars.

Though, at first sight, it appears that this case was decided on the concurrent findings of the lower Courts, the lower Courts seem to have arrived at the finding more with reference to the considerations as to the rights of the mirasidars as set out in the Mirasi Papers than on the evidence which was very meagre. This case is, however, important as explaining Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1). In dealing with the case their Lordships Mr. Justice Benson and Mr. Justice Wallis observe as follows:—“With regard to Sivantha Naicken v. Nattu Ranga Chari (1), we think the decision proceeded on the facts proved...as to the particular village and does not lay down as a matter of law that poramboke lands in villages such as this in the Chingleput District must necessarily be held to be the property of the zemindar.”

Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar is of opinion that “there can be little doubt that till 1886 the inclination of the High Court was to hold that mirasidars had ownership rights in immemorial waste and in nattam sites also” I do not think that the cases decided subsequently overrule the cases decided prior to 1886.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

In 1894 a suit was filed in the District Munsif's Court at Tiruvellore by one Bhashyarkarlu Naidu, the ekabhogam mirasidar of the Kathirvedu village, against the Secretary of State claiming to be the absolute proprietor of the gramanatham in the village and seeking for a declaration of his title and an injunction restraining the defendant from levying any assessment on it. The written statement set up the absolute right of the Government to allot land for buildings and to allow cultivation on such lands as it thinks proper to the exclusion of the mirasidars. The second issue referred to the question of the absolute right set up by Government and the District Munsif held that, both on the general incidents of mirasi tenure and on the facts of the particular case, the mirasidar had a proprietary interest in the nattam but had no right to cultivate it as he pleased.

Though the appeal by Government to the District Court was dismissed, the matter was not taken up to the High Court.

Original Suit No. 135 of 1889 on the file of the Chingleput District Munsif's Court was a suit by the mirasidar to recover the value of trees standing on the gramanatham pramboke which had been cut by some Pariahs under orders of the Sub-Collector. The Government was a party to the suit. The plaintiff obtained a decree which was confirmed by the District Court and the Government did not carry the matter any further.

In Chinnan v. Kondam Naidu (15) Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer considered the nature of the toonduwaram demanded by mirasidars. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar was of opinion that the original mirasidar was entitled to demand from the ulkudi kudivaramdar some swatantrams including what was called toonduwaram the amount of which swatantrams was a certain proportion of the gross produce raised by the ulkudi tenant. He considered swatantrams 'as a fraction of the fruits of the kudivaram right which fraction can never be lost by the mirasidar.' Mr. Justice Spencer was of opinion that, when there was a body of mirasi proprietors, there were three instead of two to share and that the toonduwaram was the landlord's share. This view is supported by the observations of Collins, C. J., and Muthuswami Ayyar, J., in Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (16).

Appeal Suit No. 76 of 1891 was decided with reference to a dispute between the shrotriendar and the mirasidars of the village of Uttukadu as to compensation. The land which was taken up by the Government lay waste from time immemorial and was stony and incapable of cultivation, unless it was first levelled and cleared of stones. The mirasidars, although they admitted that the shrotriendar had the melwaram right in the property, contended that, Uttukadu being a mirasi village, the kudivaram right vested in them. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs did not prove that they were mirasidars. On appeal their Lordships Mr. Justice Muthuswami Ayyar and Mr. Justice Best found on the evidence that the plaintiffs were mirasidars. They held that the shrotriendar and the mirasidars had in law a joint interest in the land taken up, and that the compensation should be apportioned between them both. The whole judgment proceeds on the footing that, if the plaintiffs proved that they were mirasidars of the village, their joint right to waste land followed as a matter of course.

Reference has been made by Mr. Grant to the observations of Mr. Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar in Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (7), to the effect that the gramanatham or village site is presumably the freehold property of the Government. The natham in question was in the Kistna District where mirasi rights do not exist. There can be little doubt that in non-mirasi villages the control of the gramanatham vests in the revenue authorities and that they are at liberty to grant portions of it at their discretion to applicants. I need only refer to Collector of Godaveri v. Jananavula Pedda Pengayya (17) and Putloor Boyanna v. Golusu Asethu (8). In the case of mirasi villages different considerations prevail and the question is how far the (15) 23 Ind. Cas. 113; 26 M. L. J. 169; 1 L. W. 41.

(16) 7 M. L. J. 1.

(17) 4 M. L. T. 440.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

absolute right of Government to waste lands is controlled by such of the incidents of mirasi tenure as are in force by virtue of custom or usage recognised by the British Government and enforced by judicial decisions of competent Courts. If the question was merely one of preference, the decision in Fakir Muhammad v. Tirumala Chariar (9), which was followed in Theivu Pandithan v. Secretary of State (18), would apply; but if the mirasidars have a proprietary interest in the soil the rights are capable of being enforced if ignored by Government.

The conclusion I have come to is that while on the one hand the absolute right of the mirasidars to waste land has not been made out it is open to the mirasidars to prove that by custom or usage they have a proprietary interest in waste lands. Where such a right is proved the Government has no power to ignore the mirasidars and grant the land whether it be cultivable waste or other poramboke to strangers and the mirasidars can enforce their right by recovering possession. The absolute right of the Government to do what it likes with the waste in mirasi villages has not been established. The various orders of the Court of Directors and the Local Government and the decisions I have already referred to negative any such right.

It is argued by Mr. Grant that the effect of Act III of 1905 is to vest in the Government all waste lands irrespective of any rights which vested in the mirasidars before the date of the passing of the Act. It seems to me that the effect of Act III of 1905 is to vest in the Government lands which are not proved to be private property and that it is not a confiscatory measure. The effect is simply to throw the burden of proof in cases of waste land, on persons who claim that it is their property. Even prior to the passing of Act III of 1905 the effect of the judicial decisions was that prima facie waste lands vested in the Government. I need only refer to Vyakanta Bapuji v. Government of Bombay (19) and Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara (11), which were referred to with approval in Secretary of State v.

Manjeshwar Krishnayya (2). As pointed out by Mr. Justice West in Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara (11), though the introduction of British rule did not extinguish the private rights already acquired, the principle from which we must start is that waste lands belong to the State. This, however, does not prevent mirasidars from showing that by usage and custom they have a proprietary interest in the waste lands of a village and that the rights of Government are controlled by their rights. No doubt the right of the Government to see that lands do not lie waste while there are persons who are willing to engage with Government and cultivate the lands, entitles them to grant lands to strangers if the mirasidars are unable or unwilling to bring waste lands under cultivation, but when they are willing and bona fide apply for waste lands, it is difficult to see how their claims can be rejected.

I have hitherto dealt with waste lands in general, because it seems to me that gramanatham is only one of the kinds of poramboke and there is no difference in the principle between the rights of mirasidars to the various kinds of waste. So far as nattam is concerned, it is land which has been set apart for erection of dwellings for mirasidars and the ulkudi ryots and also for village servants (the cheri being the portion set apart for panchamas and 'untouchables'). It was in all probability the original homestead of the settlers and the view taken by the Government in the Government Order of 1872 already referred to by me was that it was communal property of the villagers. I am unable to accept the argument of Mr. Grant that though mirasidars may have preferential rights as regards cultivable waste, the unoccupied nattam is the absolute property of the Government and can be granted to anybody it pleases without reference to the needs of the mirasidars. I am also unable to accept the contention of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar that the gramanatham being land which cannot under any circumstances be assessed, the Government can have no right to dispose of the nattam, as the right to claim revenue is the basis on which the right of interference by Government in mirasi villages stands. The Government has always the paramount right of disposing of waste lands subject, of course, to such vested rights (either in mirasidars or communities) as may be proved to exist. In mirasi villages, the division and allotment of waste was left to the mirasidars as parties entitled to occupy the land and quite competent to divide it among themselves according to local custom and known rights (Government Order, dated 8th March 1856). It seems to me that the Government on the dissolution of village communities stands for executive purposes in their place and is clothed with all the rights of management which originally vested in the mirasidars jointly. There can be little doubt that, before the dissolution of the village communities, the affairs of the village were managed by the mirasidars in common. They were responsible for the distribution of lands, and they collected certain fees or meeras from the villagers to meet the expenses of the village. The dissolution of the village communities naturally vested in the Government the administrative duties which were formerly exercised by the mirasidars. The right of Government to allot lands to non-mirasidars and to put such persons in the position of ulkudies also gave the Government an interest in the nattam for, as a corollary to that right, the right of Government to grant sites in nattams followed. It would be against all principle to hold that, though the Government can confer waste lands on ryots, they cannot give the ryots sites in the nattam to build on. The Government has, therefore, a double right in the nattam. One is the right of superintendence over the nattam which originally vested in the mirasidars collectively, and the other is to grant sites on the unoccupied portions of the nattam to ryots to whom they grant waste lands.

(18) 21 M. 433 at p. 458; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 664.

(19) 12 B. H. C. R. App. 1.

SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI.

I do not think Courts ought to attach much weight to the argument that any recognition of the rights of the mirasidars would work a great hardship on other sections of the community. There can be little doubt that mirasi rights are capable of abuse but the remedy is by legislation. As observed by Innes, J., in Hakir Muhammad v. Tirumala Chariar (9), the estimate of the conduct of the mirasidars in this respect would have no bearing on the question of their rights.

A review of the authorities leads me to the conclusion that the mere fact that Government grants the whole or any portion of unoccupied gramanattam to strangers is no ground for holding that the preferential rights of the mirasidars are extinguished in cases where the mirasidars have proved the unoccupied nattam in the village has been used by them as communal property or has been treated by the Government as such. In considering whether the mirasidars have anything more than the ordinary rights of preference which are conferred on non-mirasidars by the darkhast rules framed by the Government, it is difficult to ignore the following facts:—

(1) the resolution of the Court of Directors in 1844 and the Government Order in 1872;

(2) the acknowledged fact that mirasidars had a right to levy tunduwaram, which has been defined by the Board of Revenue in their minute of the 5th January 1818 as "the clear landlord's rent" and by Mr. Maclean in his Manual of Administration as "the profits of the mirasidar owner after paying Government dues;"

(3) the award of compensation to mirasidars where waste lands were acquired;

(4) decrees of Court granting relief to mirasidars in suits for ejectment, which necessarily presuppose the possession of an interest in immoveable property; and

(5) the framing of separate darkhast rules for the Chingleput District in 1869 and the deliberate distinction between mirasi and other villages in the previous settlements of the District and in the Standing Order No. 39 of the Board of Revenue issued in 1878, where "Collectors are directed to assert the prerogative of Government by making it known that except in zemindari villages, mirasi villages and villages which are private property, sites in gramanatham cannot be appropriated without permission." I find myself unable to hold as a general rule that the preferential right of the mirasidars in mirasi villages is the same as that of ryots in non-mirasi villages.

The materials before me are not sufficient to enable me to hold that the mirasi system is a well-defined tenure with certain well-recognised incidents so as to enable one in every case to start with the presumption that the gramanatham is the exclusive property of the mirasidars. The rights of mirasidars in the various administrative Districts into which the territory formerly known as Tondaimandalam was divided after British occupation have not been uniformly recognised by the Government and while in some districts the mirasidars' claims dwindled down into a mere preferential right they were more extensive in others. There can be little doubt that the ryotwari system introduced by the East India Company dealt a very severe blow on the communal holding of property and destroyed village autonomy to a considerable extent. The granting of separate pattas and the right claimed by Government to confer occupancy rights on non-mirasidars in case mirasidars refused to engage or committed default introduced radical changes in the communal principle. As observed by Sankaran Nair, J., "it is now difficult to say whether there is any presumption of mirasi right in any District or to what extent the village community have succeeded in preserving their rights."

SUNDRAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR.

The nature and extent of mirasidars' rights over waste in any particular district or portion thereof must be proved in each case, and I do not think that it can be laid down as an abstract proposition of law that the right to eject grantees from Government of sites in the nattam or cheri follows as a matter of course. Where, however, mirasidars prove that they have been enjoying the nattam as common property or that by custom or user they acquired rights over it, the mirasidars have the undoubted right of requiring the Government to recognise such rights and of ejecting persons brought on the nattam or cheri by Government in violation of their rights.

The reference to the Full Bench is general and I do not think it necessary to find whether in the present case the mirasidars have proved their alleged rights. This is a matter for the Divisional Court.

To conclude I am of opinion that

(1) in mirasi villages the rights of Government over waste (including nattam and cheri) are subject to the rights of the mirasidars;

(2) the nature and extent of such rights are not uniform throughout the Presidency but vary, and the onus is on the mirasidars to prove that any specified incident attaches to mirasi rights in any particular District, there being no presumption that gramana-tham is the exclusive property of the mirasidars;

(3) the rights of mirasidars over waste are not extinguished by the mere fact that the Government grants pattas to strangers; and would answer the reference accordingly.

Reference answered.

V. R. P.

MADRAS HIGH COURT. FULL BENCH.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 427 TO 435
OF 1916.

January 18, 1917.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice,
Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

S. SUNDRAM AYYAR, RECEIVER OF THE TANJORE PALACE ESTATE —PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER IN ALL

versus

IN C. R. P. No. 427

RAMACHANDRA AYYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 428

RENGASAMI AYYANGAR—DEFENDANT'S
LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE—RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 429

SAMINATHA MUDALI—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 430

SELLATAHAMMAL—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 431

MUTHUSAMI AYYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 432

SAMINATHA AYYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 433

DORAISAMY AYYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 434

KASINATHA AYYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 435

KALIAPERUMAL MUDALI—DEFENDANT
RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. I of 1908), s. 3 (2)

SUNDARAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR.

(d)—Tanjore Palace Estate, whether 'estate' under the Act—Grants, irrevocable, of land revenue only, whether 'estates'—'Inam', 'jagir', meaning of—Suits for rent due to Tanjore Palace—Jurisdiction.

The Tanjore Palace Estate, which is a grant by Government of land revenue alone to persons not owning the kudivaram right, is an 'estate' within the meaning of section 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 980, col. 1.]

Section 3 (2) (d) of the Act does not exclude villages in the granted revenues of which the Government reserves no reversionary interest. [p. 981, col. 2.]

The word inam should not be given a restricted meaning and includes all jagirs and grants of a dignified character which for that reason are styled mokhasa and covering a number of villages in which Government do not claim a reversion. [p. 980, col. 1.]

Suits for rent due to the Tanjore Palace Estate under section 77 of the Act are cognizable by the Revenue Courts. [p. 980, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—Clause (d) of section 3 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act restricts the operation of the Act by including only the inams therein mentioned, thereby excluding the so-called minor inams, but the definition as a whole clearly shows the general intention of the Legislature to include all large estates held directly under Government and clause (c) extends it to estates consisting of one or more villages not held directly under Government but as a permanent under-tenure. [p. 979, col. 2.]

All jagirs are a species of inams, though there are many kinds of inams that are not jagirs. [p. 980, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—When a Madras Statute uses the word 'inam', it does not signify a gift of whatever kind of property by a superior individual of whatever status to an inferior. [p. 981, col. 1.]

Civil revision petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 721 to 727, 432 and 425 of 1915, respectively, preferred against those of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Kumbakonam, in Rent Suits Nos. 27, 29, 32 to 34, 36, 51, 4 and 2 of 1914, respectively.

These petitions coming on for hearing on the 29th November 1916, upon perusing the petitions, the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and the records in the cases, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. V. Krishaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioner in all the petitions, of Messrs. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar and A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondent in Civil Revision Petition No. 427 of 1916, and of Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents in Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 428, 433 and 434 of 1916, and the Respondents in the remaining petitions not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the cases having stood over for consideration till the 5th December 1916, the Court (Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.), made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

AYLING, J.—These petitions involve the consideration of a single point only, but one of great and far-reaching importance, namely, whether the Tanjore Palace Estate is an estate within the meaning of section 3 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1903.

The suits out of which they arise were filed under the provisions of section 77 of that Act in the Court of the Revenue Sub-Divisional Officer of Kumbakonam. No question of jurisdiction was raised in that Court; but, on appeal to the District Judge, the latter, apparently of his own initiation, raised the point, and decided that the Tanjore Palace Estate was not an estate within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act; and that, in consequence, the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction. He accordingly returned the plaints for re-presentation to the proper Court. This is the order which is sought to be revised.

The District Judge relied solely on a recent unreported decision of a Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913,* which, on the face of it, is clear

*MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2661 OF 1913.

November 23, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

SUNDARAM IYER, RECEIVER AND MANAGER, PALACE ESTATE, TANJORE—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

DEVA SANKARA BHUT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 1028 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 344 of 1908.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—This was a suit by the Receiver of the Tanjore Palace Estate to recover possession of certain lands in the possession of the defendant alleged by the plaintiff to be held on a tenancy from year to year. The defendant relied on the terms of the muchilika Exhibit A dated June 13th, 1889, given to him by the Public Works Department authorities, as creating a permanent tenancy and alternatively authority on the point. The petitioner's Vakil was forced to contend that the decision was wrong: and some argument was addressed to us on both sides regarding this. Speaking for myself, I do not think I should have felt justified, as a result of that argument, in refusing to follow that decision, if it had been reported in the authorised series. But at the very end of the argument, we found that the learned Judges had declined to allow the case to be reported on the ground that contended that he was entitled to permanent rights of occupancy under the Madras Estates Land Act. The lower Appellate Court found that the defendant had a right of occupancy and the plaintiff appeals. Both defences are relied on in this Court. With regard to Exhibit A, it is sufficient to say that it is no more than a license to cut Nanal jungle on the right bank of the Vannar river from year to year and in no sense a lease of the land, far less a permanent lease. The Public Works Department clearly had neither the intention nor the authority to grant any such lease. The Government order of February 25th, 1889, in pursuance of which the so-called lease was executed, informed the Public Works Department authorities that the Tanjore Palace Estate was entitled to the grass grown on the Padugais and directed the crediting to estate funds of grass cut there. In consequence of these directions the right to cut grass was leased by the Executive Engineer for the benefit of the estate and the lease was in 1895 transferred to the Palace Estate. This contention, therefore, fails. The next contention has raised very large questions as to the nature of the interest vested in the Tanjore Royal Family in these lands by their restoration to the family and the effect of the Act of State on the rights of the tenants in possession. We do not propose to consider these questions, as we are satisfied that the estate does not come within the purview of the Madras Estates Act at all, whether the kudivaram interest is vested in the estate or not. It is clearly not within clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 3. The only clause that could possibly apply is clause (d), any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been made, confirmed or recognized by the British Government. The history of the grant is well known and it is to be found in the reports in Secretary of State v. Kamache Boy Sahaba (1) and Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (2). The Governor-in-Council in exercise of the sovereign rights of the Crown made over the estate to the senior widow with succession to the daughter of the late Rajah or failing her, the next heirs of the late Rajah [vide Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (2)]. It was held in that case that this grant was a grant it had not been fully argued. In these circumstances, we felt some difficulty as to the best course to adopt. The argument addressed to us was certainly not of such a nature that we should like to base the decision of an important point on it. Both the learned Vakils were clearly to some extent influenced by the existence of the previous decision. I should not be prepared to come to a different conclusion without a much more exhaustive consideration of the question. The importance of the point of grace and favour by Government (vide page 445) and this language does accord with the natural meaning of the word inam. We are satisfied, however, that we have not to look to the natural meaning of the word in construing the clause. "Granted in inam" is a phrase with which the Courts are very familiar and inam has acquired a definite meaning since the Inam Settlement. It was pointed out in argument that a forfeited zemin-dari when re-granted is, broadly speaking, "granted in inam" but it is never called an inam. One peculiar feature in inams has always been the intention of the Government to reserve a reversionary right, whether the grant be personal, service or religious. When the grant is personal, that right has been the subject of enfranchisement by the Commission. Could it be suggested that Government has at any time contemplated the position that enfranchisement would give a better title for the heirs of the late Rajah? Both the circumstances of the grant and its subsequent treatment are against any such supposition. The language of the Despatch of the Secretary of State of October 23rd, 1862, was that "His Majesty's Government was willing to relinquish to the surviving members of the late prince's family the benefits accruing from these possessions." The word relinquish is, I think, indicative. Nowhere is the grant termed inam, whereas later on in the same Despatch the Secretary of State approves of the decision of the Madras Government that "Certain alienations of the nature of inam should be dealt with by the Inam Commissioner." In the District Manual, the mokhasa (as it is there, rather loosely, termed), although stated to be treated for all practical purposes as an unenfranchised inam, is carefully distinguished from inams properly so-called. To conclude, the nature of the estate is far more analogous to a permanently settled estate though there is, of course, no revenue liability on it. We cannot include it in the class dealt with in clause (d) merely because of the literal meaning of the word inam. The respondent, therefore, cannot treat it as an estate and his claim to permanent rights of occupancy fails. The second appeal will be allowed with costs, plaintiff being given a decree for possession with mesne profits at Rs. 7 per annum from April 1st, 1908, till delivery in execution or three years from the date, whichever first occurs.

SUNDRAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR.

SADASIVA AYYAR, J.—I concur.

(1) 7 M. L. A. 476; 13 Moo. P. C. 22; 7 W. R. (Eng.) 722; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 42; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 373; 14 Sar. P. C. J. 684; 19 E. R. 338; 132 R. R. 7.

(2) 3 M. H. C. R. 424.

SUNDRAM AIYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AIYAR.

has already been referred to. The Tanjore Palace Estate embraces nearly 200 villages and extends over a large tract of country. I believe it has been assumed, from the very enactment of Act I of 1908, that it came within the scope of the latter's operation as an "estate;" and the number of decisions of this and subordinate Courts based on this assumption must be very large. In fact the dislocation and confusion which would be the logical result of the unreported decision being followed are so great that the necessity of resort to legislation might have to be considered.

In these circumstances I think we are justified in referring the question to a Full Bench and would state it as follows:—

Whether the Tanjore Palace Estate is an "estate" within the meaning of section 3 (2) of Act I of 1908?

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The short point is whether the Tanjore Palace Estate is an estate within the meaning of that expression in section 3 (2) of Act I of 1908. There can be no doubt that it is not covered by clauses (a), (b), (c) and (e). Does it come under clause (d)? The proprietor, by whatever name he might have been known in the past, does not own the kudivaram right in the village in his possession. It is conceded that the grant to him was only of the land revenue. It was a grant, if any, by the British Government. The further question is whether the villages were granted in inam. Before dealing with this question, it may be stated that it is not conceded that there was any grant by the Government. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar suggested that it was a case of a retention of a portion of the Raj and the relinquishment of the rest to the British Government. It may also be put the other way. See Hickey's book on the Tanjore Palace Estate, Appendix C3, and also Jiyoiyamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (1). Assuming that there was a grant, was it an inam grant?

In Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913, Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., held that the villages belonging to the estate did not come under clause (d). In that case the point was conceded in the Courts below and was only incidentally raised in the High Court. Consequently the question was not fully argued. I was informed by one of the learned Judges that the decision requires re-consideration. The other learned Judge, in refusing to give permission to publish the decision in the Indian Law Reports, has left a note that the case was not fully argued. Nonetheless, the decision has been followed by the District Judge in the present case; and we are informed that a large number of cases await the decision of this case.

(1) 3 M. H. C. R. 424.

The matter in controversy relates to the meaning to be attached to the term "gr. nted in inam." The learned Judges inclined to the view that, unless there is the incident of resumability, there can be no inam. The meaning given in Wilson's Glossary does not support this view. In Unide Rajaha Raje Bommarauze Bahadur v. Penmasamy Venkataadry Naidoo (2) the Judicial Committee seem to contemplate an inam which may not be resumed.

I am not prepared to accept Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar's contention that there can be no inam unless it be conferred by the Government. I do not understand Raghojirao Saheb v. Lakshmanarao Saheb (3) laying down such a proposition. The learned Vakil argued that it is of the essence of an inam that it is permanent. It may be that permanency and heritability attach to an inam so long as it is not resumed. The observations of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (4) were relied upon for the proposition that the Government has no right to resume even a service inam. As at present advised, I am not prepared to accede to this proposition. What was held in that case was that by the enfranchisement there was no resumption and re-grant. I do not understand that decision as laying down that the Government could not have resumed the land under any circumstances. See Boddupalli Jaganadham v. Secretary of State (5) and Subramaniam Chettiar v. Secretary of State (6) and Tadikonda Buchi Virabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna (7).

(2) 7 M. I. A. 128 at p. 133; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 121; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 300; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 637; 19 E. R. 258.

(3) 16 Ind. Cas. 239; 36 B. 639; 16 C. W. N. 1058; 23 M. L. J. 383; 12 M. L. T. 472; (1912) M. W. N. 1140; 14 Bom. L. R. 1226; 17 C. L. J. 17; 39 I. A. 202.

(4) 26 M. 339.

(5) 27 M. 16.

(6) 28 Ind. Cas. 639; (1915) M. W. N. 276; 2 L. W. 353; 28 M. L. J. 392.

(7) 20 Ind. Cas. 769; (1913) M. W. N. 782; 24 M. L. J. 659.

SUNDRAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR.

On the other hand, there is no authority for saying that, unless a grant possesses the characteristics of resumability, it should not be regarded as an inam. In the fifth report of the Madras Presidency, Volume II, page 14, the nature of the inam or beneficial grant is stated at some length. It is clear that the Moghul Government made non-resumable inam grants. That the British Government, in the earlier years of its administration, granted many inams is evident from numerous grants made by them. This practice was objected to by the Board of Directors in 1822 and 1829 and was practically abandoned since then. There is no reason for supposing that the grants by the British Government always partook of the character of resumability.

It is not necessary to discuss the matter much further, as, in my opinion, the question is one of great importance and should be settled by a Full Bench of this Court.

I agree, therefore, that the question suggested by my learned brother should be referred to the decision of a Full Bench.

These civil revision petitions coming on for hearing, in pursuance of the above order, on the 10th January 1917, upon perusing the said Order of Reference, and upon hearing the arguments of the Counsel on both sides and the cases having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The repealed Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865, contained in section 1 a comprehensive definition of "landholders," and proceeded to regulate the relations of certain classes of landholders enumerated in section 3 with their tenants, as those holding under them were called, leaving other landholders unrestricted. The classes who were made the subject of this special legislation were broadly speaking, with one exception, assignees of land revenue, and ordinary Government ryots paying the full assessment direct to Government were unaffected. In the present Act the line is drawn by the definition of "estate" in section 3 (2), which has been adapted from the definition of "estate" in section 4 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, II of 1894. Clause (d) restricts the operation of the Act by including only the inams therein mentioned, thereby excluding the so-called minor inams, but the definition as a whole clearly shows the general intention of the Legislature to include all large estates held directly under Government, and clause (e) extends it to estates consisting of one or more villages not held directly under Government but as a permanent under-tenure. The presumption, therefore, is that it was the intention of the Legislature to apply the provisions of the Act to the numerous villages constituting the Tanjore Palace Estate, though it is, of course, necessary to show that they come within one or other of the classes of the definition. The villages in question formed part of the territories of the Rajah of Tanjore, as to which he agreed by the treaty of 1799 to cede the collection of the revenues and the administration of justice to the East India Company. By some arrangement come to at the time the Company refrained from enforcing its rights under the treaty to the revenue of these villages, and they remained in the enjoyment of the Rajahs until the death of the last Rajah, when his territories were taken possession of on behalf of the Crown by an act of state. It was expressly decided in Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (8) that these villages, forming the so-called private estate of the Rajah, then became the property of Government; and some years later they were granted as a matter of grace and favour to the widows of the late Rajah and after them to his daughter, or failing her his next heirs, as held by this Court in Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (1). It is admitted that the kudivaram right in the suit village, and in almost all the other villages, does not belong to the estate; and these villages are, therefore, villages of which the land revenue alone has been granted by the British Government to persons not owning the kudivaram right, and they, therefore, come within clause (d) if they can be said to have been granted "in inam" within the meaning of the section. The definition of the word inam in Wilson's Glossary expressly covers irresumable revenue-free grants or assignments of revenue such as this. The word "inam" as held by the Privy Council in Raghojirao Saheb v. Lakshmanrao Saheb (3) is a term of wide signification, wide enough, as held in Sam v. Ramalinga Mudaliar (9) to include jagirs which, however, are separately mentioned in clause (c) of the definition. The meaning of the term jagir is discussed in that case, and I agree with the observation of Coutts Trotter, J., that all jagirs are a species of inams, though there are many kinds of inams that are not jagirs. The terms jagir and jagirdar were terms of some dignity, and were used in the grants themselves or by the grantees for that reason. The grant now in question appears to have been commonly spoken of as a mokhasa grant, and though it cannot be said to have been granted as what is understood as mokhasa tenure, the use of the word goes to show that it was regarded as an inam of a dignified character. There was no distinctive word for a peculiar inam of this kind, and it was probably thought better to use the word mokhasa, though not strictly applicable, rather than to describe the grantees merely as inamdars, a term which includes large numbers of petty grantees in very humble circumstances. There is, in my opinion, no sufficient ground for supposing that it was intended to exclude from the operation of section 3 (2) (d) grants which were irresumable, as the fact that they were irresumable would not be a ground for excluding them, having regard to the policy of the Act. I am not satisfied that the rules for the adjudication and settlement of inam lands of 1859 have any bearing on this question. Under rule 4 personal or subsistence grants, such as this, if inquired into, would have simply been confirmed according to their tenor, that is to say, as revenue-free and irresumable. However this may be, I do not think these rules afford any ground for putting a restrictive construction on the word inam as used by the Legislature in the Act of 1908, especially when the result of so doing would be to exclude from the operation of the Act a large estate which there is no other reason for excluding. I would answer the question in the affirmative.

(8) 12 M. I. A. 1; 9 W. R. (P. C.) 15; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 114; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 348; 20 E. R. 241.

SUNDRAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR.

SADASIVA AYYAR, J.—I take it that, though the question referred to us is as regards the whole of the Tanjore Palace Estate consisting among other things of about 190 villages, our answer is to be confined to the mokhasa Ullikadai village within whose limits are situated all the subject-matters of the suits out of which these revision petitions have arisen. As regards this village, it seems to have been conceded by the respondents' Vakil before the referring Bench that the land revenue alone belonged to the Tanjore Palace Estate. I concur entirely with my lord as regards the whole estate that there was a new grant in 1862 to the Rajah's senior widow by the British Government. That new grant related to the Government revenue alone (according to the admission above mentioned) so far as the arable lands of the Ullikadai village were concerned.

(9) 34 Ind. Cas. 803; 30 M. L. J. 600; 40 M. 664.

The next question is whether the grant of the revenue of this village can be called a 'grant in inam' by the British Government and whether the definition of estate found in clause 2 (d) of section 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act applies to this village. I concurred with Mr. Justice Napier in his judgment in Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913 in which he held that in the phrase 'granted in inam,' the word 'inam' should be given a definite and restricted meaning which (according to my said learned brother) that word had acquired in the Madras Presidency since the days of the first Inam Settlement. That restricted and definite meaning (if I understood his judgment aright) was a grant of lands or land revenue made in such a manner that a reversionary right could be claimed by the British Government in the subject of the grant on the occurrence of certain events. As no such reservation was intended in the case of the grant of revenue of any of the villages of the Tanjore Palace Estate, we held in Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913 that it did not consist of villages whose revenues were granted 'in inam'. The Government never seems to have contemplated the registration of these villages as inam villages or to include them in the list of inam villages to be entered in the Registration Records relating to such villages. There seems to have been no intention to instruct the Inam Commissioners or the Inam Settlement Officers to deal with any of these Palace Estate villages by way of confirmation or of modification of the grant of 1862.

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

No doubt, the word 'inam' means "gift or benefaction" in the widest and most popular sense of that Arabic term, which has passed practically into every one of the vernacular languages of India. It is a gift by a superior to an inferior and is applied in popular language to any gift, whether of moveables or immoveables and of however petty a value. But it has also got several restricted meanings, such restricted meanings varying in different parts of India. Wilson says, "In India, and especially in the south, and amongst the Marathas, the term was specially applied to grants of land held rent free, and in hereditary and perpetual occupation." Then he says, "the tenure came in time to be qualified by the reservation of a portion of the assessable revenue, or by the exaction of all proceeds exceeding the intended value of the original assessment." He says further on that "the term was also vaguely applied to grants of rent-free land without reference to perpetuity or any specified conditions." He likewise mentions very numerous distinctions among the tenures called "Inams" (See also pages 38 to 41 of Mr. Rama Doss' Book on the Estates Land Act).

It is thus clear that when a Madras Statute uses the word 'inam', it does not signify a gift of whatever kind of property by a superior individual of whatever status to an inferior. Some restriction of the above very wide general significance being assumed (the Inam rules found in the Board's Standing Orders, Volume 2, paragraph 52, the Proceedings of the Inam Commissioner and the Regulation IV of 1862, all these also evidently implying such a qualification), Mr. Justice Napier's opinion was that the Legislature, when talking of a grant "in inam", could have had in its contemplation only grant in the subject of which the Government had retained some reversionary interest to be enforced in certain contingencies. I am free to admit that the knowledge of my learned brother Mr. Justice Napier as regards revenue matters and revenue regulations and his long official experience of such questions (through official contract with the higher Revenue Officers of the Government) being much more extensive than I could profess to claim, I without much hesitation deferred to his opinion on the question,

Even after the full arguments which I have heard in this Full Bench Reference, I cannot say that the view which Napier, J., and myself took in Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913 is wholly unsupportable.

But as my lord the Chief Justice, whose experience and whose knowledge of the history, policy and progress of the legislation which resulted in the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act is, if I may say so with respect, unique, is of opinion that the Legislature could not have intended in the definition in clause (d) of section 3 (2) to exclude villages in the granted revenues of which the Government reserved no reversionary interest, I agree that the opinion contra expressed in the decision in Second Appeal No. 2661 of 1913 should be overruled, especially because (as pointed out by Mr. Justice Ayling in his referring judgment) the preponderating balance of convenience is in favour of not restricting unduly the meaning of the phrase "granted in inam".

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The further arguments addressed to us have confirmed me in the view I took in the Order of Reference. I entirely agree with the opinions expressed by the learned Chief Justice.

*Reference answered
in the affirmative.*

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

January 24, 1917.

Present:—Lord Parker of Waddington,
Lord Sumner, Sir John Edge and Sir Lawrence Jenkins.

Raja RANJIT SINGH BAHADUR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Srimati KALI DAS DEBI AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Village Chowkidari Act (VI B. C. of 1870), ss 49, 50, 51—Bengal Decennial Settlement Regulation (VIII of 1793), ss. 36 to 41—Patni tenure—Chowkidari chakran lands, resumption of—Permanent Settlement—Zemindar, rights of.

Chowkidari Chakran lands resumed by Government and transferred to the zemindar under Bengal Act VI of 1870 pass by virtue of such transfer to the holder of a patni lease of the villages within which such lands are situate. [p. 926, col. 2.]

The prima facie title of the zemindar to Chakran lands within his district is recognised by the Permanent Settlement. The zemindar's interest in such lands, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, passes under a patni grant [p. 485, col. 1,

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

Not only does Bengal Act VI of 1870 recognise the existing title of the zemindar to the lands resumed, but the estate taken by the zemindar under the order of transfer is in confirmation and by way of continuance of his existing estate, and when the zemindar or those through whom he claims enter or have entered into contracts affecting his existing estate, the rights of third parties under such contracts are preserved. [p. 986, col. 2.]

Consolidated appeals from two judgments and twenty decrees of the Calcutta High Court, passed in second appeal from various Courts in the Birbhum District.

FACTS.—Twenty suits were brought by various plaintiffs to recover possession from the defendant Raja, who holds large Zemindaris in the Birbhum District, of Chowkidari Chakran lands resumed by Government and transferred to him under Bengal Act VI of 1870. Each plaintiff was the patnidar or dar-patnidar of the village within which the lands subject of the suit were situate. In these suits in which the dar-patnidar was plaintiff, the patnidar was made a defendant. The decree in each suit was in favour of plaintiff and was confirmed on appeal by the High Court.

Hence this appeal.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Eddis, for the Appellant.

Sir H. Erle Richards, K. C., Messrs. Dunne, and H. N. Sen, for Panchanani Dasi (Respondent in several appeals).

Sir W. Garth, for Mina Kunwari Devi (Respondent in one appeal.)

Several other respondents did not appear.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., for the Appellant.—The Village Chowkidari Act 1870 (Bengal Act VI of 1870) does not apply to Chowkidar Chakran lands unless they were excluded from the Revenue Settlement. The onus of showing that they were so excluded is on the Government. The very fact of those lands falling under the Act shows that they were not included in those settled with the Zemindar.

Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1), Ram Chandra Bhanj Deo v. Secretary of State (2).

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 676; 42 L. A. 30 at pp. 31, 39, 42; 42 C. 710; 19 C. W. N. 65; 17 Bom. L. R. 32; 21 C. L. J. 31; 17 M. L. T. 1; 2 L. W. 11; 28 M. L. J. 457 (P. C.).

(2) 37 Ind. Cas. 223; 20 C. W. N. 1245; 20 M. L. T. 235; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 175; 4 L. W. 251; 14 A. L. J. 1009; 18 Bom. L. R. 838; 24 C. L. J. 296; 31 M. L. J. 745; 43 C. 1104; 43 L. A. 172 (P. C.).

Here the Chowkidari Chakran lands did not belong to the Zemindar at the date of the patni leases. The profits of these lands were not taken into account in fixing the assessment. The Zemindar had no right in the lands under Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793; he merely had a certain call on the services of the Chowkidars. Bengal Regulation XXII of 1793 gives the right of nominating Chowkidars to the Zemindar: there is no authority to the effect that such right passed to the patnidars and no suggestion that the patnidars in fact exercised such right.

Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793 is relied on as showing that the Zemindar had the proprietary right in these lands, but section 4 of that Regulation only covers cases where Government assessed rent or revenue on the lands. Here no revenue was assessed.

Our title to these lands is a new title under Act VI of 1870 arising long after the patni leases were made.

At first the Police in Bengal came under the Zemindars—Harington's Analysis, Volume I, pages 459, 513. The Zemindars entertained Tannahdars and Pykes, and remunerated them either by assigning them Chakran lands or by money. In the calculation of the giver the profits of such Chakran lands were not brought into account, and deductions were made in favour of the Zemindar for money payments made by him. This was altered by Regulation I of 1793, section 8 (4). The Police control was taken away from the Zemindars, the allowances were resumed, and the lands assigned by the Zemindars were left to them until Act VI of 1870, after and in consequence of which they were given the proprietary right in such lands: Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (3), Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1).

Reference was also made to Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (4), Upendra Narain Bhattacharjee v. Pratap Chunder Pardhan (5), Kashim Sheikh v. Prasanna Kumar Mukerjee (6), Ranjit Singh

(3) 10 M. L. A. 16 at pp. 17, 18, 20; 1 W. R. (P. C.) 26; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 542; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 54; 19 E. R. 879.

(4) 4 C. W. N. 814 at p. 817.

(5) 31 C. 703; 8 C. W. N. 320.

(6) 33 C. 596; 10 C. W. N. 598; 5 C. L. J. 299.

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

v. Radha Charan Chandra (7), Shaikh Jonab Ali
v. Rakibuddin Mallik (8), Kazi Newaz Khoda
v. Ram Jadu Dey (9) and Binad Lal Pakrashi
v. Kalu Pramanik (10).

Mr. Eddis followed.

Sir H. Erle Richards, K. C., for the Respondent Panchanani Dasi.—There are three obstacles to appellant's case. (1) Section 41 of Regulation VIII of 1793, (2) the matter is concluded by Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (3). There has been at Calcutta a current of decisions against the contention, extending from 1900 till now, with the one exception of Kashim Sheik v. Prasanna Kumar Mukerjee (6), which is to some extent in his favour.

I have in my favour findings of fact that the lands are within the ambit of my patni and that the Chowkidars were in my service.

Appellant's contention that the lands did not belong to him as Zemindar was not raised in the Courts below, where the question argued was limitation. The present question is one of fact and cannot be raised now.

Apart from this, the contention fails on the merits. Lakhiroj lands are dealt with in section 36 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793. Section 41 lays down in terms that Chakran lands are not meant to be included in the exception contained in section 36 and are declared responsible for the public revenue. If, as is now contended, these lands belonged to Government independently, there is no sense in making them security for the revenue. Lord Kingsdown, in Joykishen Mookerjee's case (3), explains that Chakran lands were included in the Malguzari lands for the purpose of securing the assessment, because in the event of a sale for non-payment it was important they should be transferred to the purchasers, with whom the appointment of the Chowkidars would vest.

There is a direct decision of the Calcutta High Court against appellant's contention, Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (9). The same point arose but was not even argued in Banwari Mukunda Deb v. Bidhu Sundar Thakur (11).

The case of Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1) is really against appellant; it lays down that the Zemindar is entitled as such to Chowkidari Chakran lands within his Zemindari. The same principle is recognised in Ram Chandra Bhanj Deo v. Secretary of State (2).

By section 51 of Act VI of 1870, the transfer of Chakran lands to the Zemindar under that Act is subject to all contracts theretofore made, etc. Patni leases are contracts within the meaning of that section.

Mr. Eddis, in reply.—Our point was taken in the Original Court and is still open to us.

We do not say Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1) is wrong: we rely on it. In that case the lands were lands belonging to the Zemindari assessed to revenue, but assigned by the Zemindar for service purposes, and, therefore, though called Chowkidari Chakran lands, did not fall within the definition in Act VI of 1870. This is the converse case; the lands here are lands not assessed to revenue and falling within the definition.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—This is a consolidated appeal from decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal, made in twenty suits, each of which, though relating to a distinct subject-matter, raised substantially the same questions of law. Each suit was in substance a suit to recover possession from the appellant, who is the registered proprietor of extensive Zemindaris in the Birbhum District of Bengal, of Chowkidari Chakran lands recently resumed by Government and transferred to him under the provisions of Act VI of 1870 of the Bengal Council. The plaintiff in each suit was the putnidar or dar-putnidar of the village within the boundaries of which the lands the subject of the suit were situate. In those suits in which the dar-putnidar was the plaintiff, the putnidar was made a (7) 34 C. 564.

(8) 9 C. W. N. 571; 1 C. L. J. 303.

(9) 34 C. 109; 5 C. L. J. 33; 11 C. W. N. 201.

(10) 20 C. 708; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 477.

(11) 35 C. 343; 12 C. W. N. 459; 7 C. L. J. 439.

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

defendant, but took no part in the argument. The decree in each suit was in favour of the plaintiff and against the appellant.

Their Lordships consider it unnecessary to deal at further length with the history of the litigation. It is abundantly clear from the facts found in the Courts below, and was not disputed before their Lordships' Board, that any interest which the appellant or his predecessors-in-title originally had in the lands the subject of each suit had, prior to the resumption and transfer of such lands under the Act of 1870, been transferred to and become vested in the plaintiff putnidar or dar-putnidar by virtue of the lease or sub-lease under which he held the villages in which these lands were situate. Two points only were argued before their Lordships. It was contended, first, that the proprietor with whom a Zemindari was settled under the Bengal Permanent Settlement, did not obtain or retain in the Chowkidari Chakran lands situate within the territorial boundaries of a village comprised in his Zemindari any interest capable of being made the subject of a putni lease; and secondly, that even if he obtained or retained any such interest, the effect of the Act of 1870 was to confer on him a new title not in any way affected by any putni lease theretofore granted by him or his predecessors-in-title. In order to arrive at a conclusion on these questions, it is necessary to consider (1) the nature of Chowkidari Chakran lands, (2) the provisions of the Bengal Permanent Settlement, and (3) the true meaning and effect of the Act.

At the time of the English occupation a Zemindar was responsible not only for the payment of the revenue but for the preservation of peace and order within his District. For the latter purpose he maintained Tannahdars, or police officials, and Chowkidars, or village watchmen. Both had from time immemorial been remunerated by allotments of land to be held in consideration of the services they rendered to the Zemindar, either rent-free or at a low rent, but whereas the police official rendered police service only, the Chowkidar not only assisted the police, but rendered acts of service personal to the Zemindar. Chakran lands are lands held by service tenure. Generically the term includes all lands so held, whether by police officials, Chowkidars, or persons whose only duties are personal to the Zemindar. The expression "Tannahdari lands or Tannahdari Chakran lands" means lands held on service tenure by Tannahdars or police officials. The expression "Chowkidari Chakran lands" means lands held on service tenure by Chowkidars, or village watchmen. As one would naturally expect, it had long been customary, in fixing the revenue or jumma payable for the Zemindari, to leave Tannahdari and Chowkidari Chakran lands out of account.

Passing to the Settlement of 1793, it appears to their Lordships to be beyond controversy that whatever doubts be entertained as to whether before the English occupation the Zemindars had any proprietary interest in the lands comprised within their respective Districts, the settlement itself recognises and proceeds on the footing that they are the actual proprietors of the land for which they undertake to pay the Government revenue. The settlement is expressly made with the "Zemindars, independent Talukdars and other actual proprietors of the soil" (see Regulation I, section 3, and Regulation VIII, section 4). It is clear that since the settlement the Zemindars have had at least a prima facie title to all lands for which they pay revenue, such lands being commonly referred to as Malguzari lands [see the case of Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Sing (12)]

Bearing this in mind, their Lordships will proceed to consider the Regulations of the Permanent Settlement, so far as they deal with Chakran lands. The leading authority on this subject is Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (3). To use Lord Kingsdown's expression in that case, the effect of the settlement is to divide Chakran lands into two classes, namely, (1) Tannahdari Chakran lands, that is, lands held on service tenure by police officials, and (2) all other Chakran lands. As to Chakran lands of the former class, they were by Bengal Regulation I, section 8, clause 4, made resumable by Government, the Government relieving the Zemindar from the duty of maintaining a police establishment. These Tannahdari Chakran lands were, in fact, shortly afterwards resumed and became Government lands, the title of the Zemindar being extinguished by such resumption. As to all other Chakran lands, whether held by public officers or private servants in lieu of wages, they are dealt with by Bengal Regulation VIII, section 41.

(12) 12 M. L. A. 292 at p. 331; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 225; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 480; 20 R. R. 349.

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

In order to understand the 41st section of the last mentioned Regulation, it is necessary to refer to some of the preceding sections. By virtue of the 36th section the assessment is to be fixed exclusive and independent of all existing lakhiraj lands, that is lands exempted from the public revenue. Such lands are, therefore, in effect withdrawn from the settlement, and the Zemindar, though these lands might be locally situated within his district, could claim no title therein by virtue of the settlement.

Sections 37 to 40 deal with certain lands referred to as "private lands" of the Zemindars. By section 37 these are not to be included in the lakhiraj lands referred to in section 36, and special directions with regard to them are given in sections 38, 39 and 40. Speaking generally, such lands are not excluded from, but on the contrary are included in the settlement. Then comes the 41st section dealing with Chakran lands; these, whether held by public officers or private servants in lieu of wages, are also not to be included in the lakhiraj lands referred to in section 36. They are to be annexed to the Malguzari lands and declared responsible for the public revenue assessed on the Zemindaris in which they are included in common with all other Malguzari lands therein.

Sections 37 to 41 inclusive appear to their Lordships to suggest that neither the "private lands" of the Zemindars nor Chakran lands had theretofore been taken into account in fixing the revenue for which the Zemindar was responsible to Government. Otherwise there would be no point in excluding them from the lakhiraj lands dealt with by section 36. However this may be with regard to the private lands of the Zemindar or with regard to Chakran lands, the services for which were purely personal to the Zemindar, it is quite clear that Tannahdari and Chowkidari Chakran lands, the services for which involved the performance of duties in which the public was interested, had not, as a rule, been taken into account for the purpose of increasing the jumma.

The effect of section 41 appears to be this: The question whether any of the Chakran lands therein referred to ought to be taken into account for the purpose of increasing the jumma is left to be determined by the custom which had hitherto prevailed or any special directions contained in the Regulations. But whether or not so taken into account, all Chakran lands are to be considered Malguzari for the purpose of ascertaining the lands in respect of which the jumma is paid and upon which it is secured. The prima facie title of the Zemindar to Chakran lands within his district is thus recognised by the settlement. Tannahdari Chakran lands may be resumed under Regulation I, section 8, clause 4, but with regard to all other Chakran lands, if resumable at all, they can be resumed by the Zemindar alone. In the case, however, of Chowkidari Chakran lands, not even the Zemindar may be entitled to resume them, for Chowkidars have public duties to perform and the lands which they hold on service tenure as remuneration for the performance of such duties are to that extent appropriated or assigned for public purposes. Subject, nevertheless, to the requirements of the public interest, the Zemindar is the owner and as such is entitled to the enjoyment of any personal services which the Chowkidars ought to render and when vacancies occur to appoint others in their place. All this follows from what was said by Lord Kingsdown in Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (3).

Such, then, being the Zemindar's interest in Chowkidari Chakran lands within his district, it is difficult to see why this interest should not be made the subject of a putni grant. That it could be so made appears to have been admitted in the last mentioned case, and the whole of Lord Kingsdown's judgment proceeds on that footing. In their Lordships' opinion there can be no reasonable doubt on this matter. Indeed, the only argument to the contrary advanced by the appellant's Counsel was based on certain expressions used by Mr. Ameer Ali in giving the reasons of the Board in the recent case of Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1). In that case, which has little, if any, bearing on the question now in controversy, the point for decision was whether the power of resumption conferred by Act VI of 1870 extended to certain Chakran lands which the Government had affected to resume thereunder. Here it is admitted by everyone that the powers of the Act were applicable. Moreover, it is abundantly clear that Mr. Ameer Ali, whatever expressions he used, did not intend to depart in the smallest degree from what had been laid down by Lord Kingsdown in Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (3). Under these circumstances, any argument based on a meticulous examination of isolated expressions used by him can, in their Lordships' opinion, have little weight.

RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI.

It remains to consider the effect of a resumption by the Government of Chowkidari Chakran lands under the provisions of Act VI of 1870 of the Bengal Council.

It should be observed that the definition of Chowkidari Chakran lands contained in the Act refers not only to the public duties of Chowkidars but also to their personal duties to the Zemindar. It is apparently for this reason that the revenue assessment in the lands resumed is, by section 49, fixed at only one-half of the annual value of such lands. If the Zemindar had no interest, the effect of this provision would be to make him a free gift of half of the value of the lands resumed. It appears to be for the same reason that the Zemindar is under section 50 entitled to contest the correctness of any assessment which is made. After the assessment is complete the Collector is, under section 50 by order in the scheduled form, to transfer the land to the Zemindar subject to the assessment. By the 51st section such order operates to transfer the land to the Zemindar subject to such assessment and "subject to all contracts theretofore made in respect of, under or by virtue of which any person other than the Zemindar may have any right to any land, portion of his estate, or tenure in the place in which such land may be situate." The latter words may not be very happily chosen, but their obvious intention is to preserve the right of third parties. They contemplate a case in which the village in which the resumed lands are situate has been made the subject of a contract by the Zemindar, or those through whom he claims and that under this contract some third party may have an interest in the lands resumed. They are wide enough to include, and in their Lordships' opinion do include, the rights of a putnidar under a putni grant by virtue of which the putnidar is lessee of the Zemindar's interest in the lands resumed, and also the rights of a dar-putnidar under a dar-putni grant. In their Lordships' opinion, therefore, not only does the Act recognise the existing title of the Zemindar to the lands resumed, but the estate taken by the Zemindar under the order of transfer is in confirmation and by way of continuance of his existing estate, and when the Zemindar or those through whom he claims has or have entered into contracts affecting his existing estate, the rights of third parties under these contracts are preserved. It is a satisfaction to their Lordships to find that the view above expressed is that hitherto almost universally adopted in the Indian Courts.

The result is that the appeal fails and should be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. With regard to costs, the appellant should pay to the respondents who have appeared one set of costs between them, but these should, having regard to the terms on which leave to appeal was granted, be as between solicitor and client.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the Appellant: Messrs. Downer and Johnson.

Solicitors for the Respondent Panchanani Dasi: Messrs. Watkins and Hunter.

Solicitors for the Respondent Mina Kumari Debi: Mr. G. C. Farr.

RAGHUBIR MISSER v. BHAJAN SINGH.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1345 OF 1916.

June 7, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Atkinson and

Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

RAGHUBIR MISSER AND OTHERS—

—APPELLANTS

versus

BHAJAN SINGH AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Boundary fence, ownership of—Trees growing on fence—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 103B—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption—Conflict with established law.

A boundary fence is owned by the adjoining proprietors to the centre of the fence, each owner being entitled to claim the land forming the fence to its centre and the trees growing thereon.

An entry in the Record of Rights cannot have the effect of overruling well-settled principles of law. Where such entry conflicts with the established law, the established law must prevail over the entry and the presumption attaching to the entry must be deemed to have been rebutted.

Appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 25th September 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Aurangabad, dated the 4th June 1916.

Mr. Sivnandan Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Siveshwar Dayal, for Mr. Kulwant Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this action seek that they may be declared entitled to 57 toddy palm trees standing upon an ar between Survey plot No. 83 and Survey plot No. 87 situated in Mauza Khanpura in the District of Gaya.

The Record of Rights in this case shows that the trees on this ar have been declared to be the property of the defendants, but this entry in the Record of Rights cannot have the effect of overruling well-settled principles of law. If, therefore, the entry in the Record of Rights conflicts with the established law, I think the established law must prevail over the entry in the Record of Rights, and that the presumption attaching to the entry in the Record of Rights must be deemed to have been rebutted. The plaintiffs and the defendants are occupiers of adjoining lands and their holdings are separated by an ar which operates as a boundary between the holding of the plaintiffs and the holding of the defendants. On this ar are planted the trees in suit. On the northern side of the ar are the defendants' lands; and on the southern side are the plaintiffs' lands; and it is on the southern side of the ar that the trees which are the subject-matter of this suit are planted.

The defendants claim these trees by virtue of the entry in the Record of Rights. The plaintiffs on the other hand contend that inasmuch as the trees in suit are planted on their side of the ar they are entitled to the trees. The ar, as I have said, operates as a boundary fence between the property of adjoining owners and it is well settled according to the English Law that a boundary fence is owned by the adjoining proprietors to the centre of the fence, each owner being entitled to claim the land forming the fence to its centre.

The learned Judge has held in this case that the ar is a boundary fence and that the trees in dispute are growing in the portion of the fence which belongs to the plaintiffs; that the ownership of the trees must depend upon whose land they are growing and that inasmuch as they are growing on the plaintiffs' land, the plaintiffs are the proprietors. I see no reason to dispute or challenge the accuracy of law stated by the learned Judge. He says that this is the settled law of the Settlement Department and that it accords with the general custom existing in this country and it also accords with the principles of equity. Therefore the Record of Rights cannot prevail in this case and as the trees in suit are growing upon the plaintiffs' lands they must be declared to be entitled to them.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed, each party bearing its own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEALS FROM OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

January 30, 1917.

Present:—Lord Chancellor (Lord Buckmaster),
Lord Wrenbury and Mr. Amær Ali.Pandit SURAJ NARAIN AND ANOTHER—
APPELLANTS*versusPandit* RATAN LAL AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family—Blending of self-acquired property with ancestral property—Effect of entries in account books as showing whether funds are joint or separate—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 21, 32—Admission—Statement against party's interest, admissibility of.

A, a member of a Hindu joint family, whose home was at Lucknow, practised as a Pleader at Hardoi, and made considerable savings from his professional earnings. He eventually became managing member, but was all along entrusted with the management of the joint family property in Hardoi district. Throughout he kept the accounts of the joint property and of his own earnings in one account book. He purchased sundry properties out of the funds so entered in the name of his son-in-law B and stated that he made such purchases to provide for B.

Held, that, by blending his private earnings with the receipts and payments on joint account, he showed an intention to make them joint property: but that it was not conclusive that all purchases entered in the book were made for the joint family: and that as regards the purchases in the name of B, A's statement that they were made to provide for B was a statement against his own interest and as such admissible in evidence, and that coupled with the other evidence in the case it established B's title to such properties as against the joint family. [p. 994, col. 2; p. 995, cols. 1 & 2]

Consolidated appeals from a judgment and decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh (Piggott, J. C., and Evans, A. J. C.), dated the 30th October 1909, modifying sundry decrees made by the Additional Judge, Hardoi, dated the 27th August 1908.

FACTS.—The parties belonged to a family of Kashmiri Brahmins whose history is set out in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (1). Bishan Narain formed a joint family with his sons, Raj Narain, Ram Narain, Bakht Narain, and Suraj Narain. On his father's death in 1867 Raj Narain became the manager of the family. Ram Narain qualified as a Pleader and started practice in 1869 at Hardoi, away from the family home which was in Lucknow.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 30, 40 I. A. 40, 17 C. W. N. 333; 13 M. L. T. 194; 11 A. L. J. 172; (1913) M. W. N. 183; 17 C. L. J. 288; 24 M. L. J. 345; 35 A. 80; 15 Bom. L. R. 456; 16 O. C. 129 (P. C.).

Raj Narain died in 1890, and Ram Narain then became manager, but continued his practice as before at Hardoi. From 1869 till his death in 1900 Ram Narain kept account books in which he entered all his receipts and expenditure. The account books of the joint family continued to be written as before at Lucknow. Ram Narain's daughter was married to Ratan Lal, respondent, who lived with his father-in-law for some time, and afterwards left him to reside in a Native State where he was employed. Ratan Lal sent sums of money to his father-in-law from time to time, and Ram Narain purchased considerable properties in the name of Ratan Lal. On Ram Narain's death it was claimed on behalf of the joint family that all properties so purchased by Ram Narain stood ismfarzi in Ratan Lal's name and formed part of the joint family property. The Additional Judge held that most of the properties in dispute were purchased with Ram Narain's money and that the family undoubtedly possessing a nucleus of ancestral property, the properties so purchased by Ram Narain really belonged to the joint family. The Appellate Court held that the transactions impugned as ismfarzi were not of that nature, and that in any case the properties were purchased by Ram Narain with his self-acquired income over which he had full power of disposal, and that having regard to the circumstances of the case and the statement (quoted in their Lordships' judgment) of Ram Narain himself, the purchasing of property in the name of Ratan Lal was by way of gift to him and to his wife. Piggott, J. C. (in whose judgment Evans, A. J. C., concurred) summed up as follows:—

"For the reasons given, I am of opinion that the fair conclusion upon the evidence is that the money invested by Pandit Ram Narain in favour of Ratan Lal and Madan Mohan Lal, in so far as it was not an investment of money remitted to Ram Narain by Ratan Lal for that purpose, consisted of Pandit Ram Narain's own self-acquired property over which he had full rights of control and disposal. His intention in making these investments would appear to have been expressly to prevent this money from blending with the joint property of the family, and to make provision out of it for the benefit of his only daughter, as well as to give expression to the

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

affection felt by him for his son-in-law Ratan Lal. This I may note is substantially the view taken by the District Judge of Hardoi in a rent suit to which Pandit Bakht Narain and Pandit Ratan Lal were parties which came before him for disposal, and I think he put the case very fairly in the said judgment which is on the record as Exhibit F-61. Before leaving this part of the case, however, I wish to add a few words upon another point. I am by no means satisfied that, even apart from my finding that the gifts in favour of Ratan Lal and Madan Mohan Lal were made by Pandit Ram Narain out of his self-acquired property, the plaintiffs would in this case be entitled to succeed, at any rate as regards the bulk of the property in dispute, once the main issue regarding the ismfarzi nature of the transactions was decided against them. The position of Pandit Ram Narain must be considered, first, as it stood before he became manager of the joint family on the death of his brother Pandit Raj Narain in August 1890, and secondly, as it stood, after that date. Up to the year 1890 we have Pandit Ram Narain living, exercising his profession as a Pleader, and carrying on business as a banker and dealer in cloth at Hardoi, while his brother Pandit Raj Narain, the manager of the joint family, resided, practised and carried on business at Lucknow. With the consent of the manager of the joint family Pandit Ram Narain was allowed the control of a portion of the joint family property, consisting of shares in villages acquired by purchase, or on usufructuary mortgage, or taken on farm from Government in the District of Hardoi. The oral evidence of some of the Ziladars and other Estate servants produced by Pandit Ikbāl Narain as witnesses in this case shows that the income of some of the Hardoi villages was ordinarily remitted direct to Pandit Raj Narain at Lucknow; but no doubt in the main the control of the income arising out of the immoveable property owned by the family in the Hardoi District was in the hands of Pandit Ram Narain. We do not know with any certainty how accounts were settled up between Ram Narain and Raj Narain, and how they stood to one another with reference to their respective enjoyment of the income of the joint family property which came into their hands; but it is fairly presumable that Pandit Ram Narain was allowed by his elder brother to spend a certain portion of the joint family income according to his own will and pleasure, as representing an allowance made to him for his personal enjoyment out of the joint family funds. Now if it be conceded, though I am not prepared to do so except for the sake of argument, that the investments made by Pandit Ram Narain in favour of Ratan Lal and Madan Mohan Lal were partly drawn, or even wholly, from that portion of the joint family income thus left to his control and disposal, what would now be the position of the plaintiffs with reference to these investments? Suppose Pandit Ram Narain had simply squandered the money in riotous living; suppose he had made large gifts of cash or jewelry in favour of some women of bad character on whom he was besotted; or suppose he had made large gifts in favour of some religious teacher, or of some political cause to which he had become violently attached, would the plaintiffs now be entitled to call in question these transactions, or to pursue in the hands of the donees property which could be proved to have been acquired by means of these donations? I conceive not. We know that Pandit Raj Narain himself as manager of the joint family never called in question any of these transactions. If he had felt dissatisfied with Pandit Ram Narain's management of the joint family property he would have been entitled to take the same under his own control, and to limit Ram Narain strictly to the enjoyment of such earnings as might admittedly represent his own self-acquisitions, together with such specific allowance from the joint family funds as he in his capacity of manager might see fit to make. He might, if very seriously dissatisfied with his younger brother's conduct, have brought a suit for partition, or have taken such stringent measures towards excluding Ram Narain from the enjoyment of the joint family property as would have driven the latter to sue for partition on his own account. In such suit for partition, there might also have been a settlement of account, and issues might have been raised as to whether the money squandered by Pandit Ram Narain, or used by him for purposes to which joint family funds should not have been applied, might not be assigned to Pandit Ram Narain's own share, as having been drawn by him in advance from the corpus of the family property. I very much doubt, however, whether any suit would have been maintainable against the donees for the recovery of money given to them by Pandit Ram Narain, not out of the corpus of the joint family property or by alienation of immoveable property belonging to the joint family, but out of the income enjoyed by him with the consent of the manager. In any case we know as a matter of fact that Pandit Raj Narain made no attempt in his lifetime to interfere with any of the dispositions in favour of Ratan Lal or Madan Mohan Lal which it is now sought to call in question. From the month of August 1890 onwards to the time of his death, Pandit Ram Narain occupied the position of manager of the joint family. In this capacity his control over the joint family funds would extend so far as to permit him to make gifts of affection to a reasonable and proper extent out of the income of the joint family property. I may refer on this point to Bachoo v. Mankorebri (2). The rights of the other members of a joint family to control wasteful or improper expenditure of the income on the part of the manager rest principally upon their right at any moment to claim a partition, accompanied by a proper settlement of accounts. The question how far they would be entitled to sue for the revocation of gifts made out of the income by the manager of the joint family seems to me at least a doubtful one, and might depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. In the present case at any rate we know that no objection was taken by any other member of the family in Pandit Ram Narain's lifetime to any dispositions made by the latter in favour of his son-in-law or his daughter's son. It is only after Pandit Ram Narain's death that the plaintiffs come into Court with the plea that, even supposing the property now in possession and enjoyment of the defendants Ratan Lal and Madan Mohan Lal was received by them by means of gifts made by Ram Narain, such gifts should be held to be invalid and the defendants liable to restore or account for the same. From every point of view this part of the plaintiffs' case, in my opinion, fails.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

(2) 29 B. 51; 6 Bom. L. R. 268.

Hence these appeals.

Mr. A. M. Dunn, for the Appellants.—There were two questions for determination: (1) Whether there is sufficient evidence to show that Ram Narain so blended his self-acquired property as to make it joint. (2) If the purchases were made with the joint funds—the result of the blending—was the claim of the respondent maintainable? As to the first, it has been concurrently found that the family was joint and undivided, and that for some years Ram Narain was its manager. The whole property possessed by the members of the family ought to be presumed to be joint and the burden of showing that it was not joint lay on the respondent. Luximon Row v. Mullar Row Bajee (3).

The purchases in Ratan Lal's name were benami. In such cases the test is the source from which the purchase-money was paid, Dhurm Das Pandey v. Musammatt Shama Soondri Debiah (4). There is no presumption of advancement in India. On the contrary the presumption is in favour of its being a benami purchase unless the contrary is shown, Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (5) and Prankishen Paul Chowdry v. Mothooramohun Paul Chowdry (6). There was nothing to show that Ram Narain made any distinction between his professional earnings and the income from the family estate. The accounts kept by him indicate that both incomes were blended together and the statement of Ram Narain shewed that all was joint. The present case falls within the principle laid down in Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (7).

As to the second point the respondent has failed to prove that any gift was made to him, nor was a gift of such valuable property by the manager of a

(3) 2 Knapp 60; 5 W. R. (P. C.) 67; 1 Norton's L. C. 169.

(4) 3 M. L. A. 229 at p. 240; 6 W. R. (P. C.) 43; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 271; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 147; 18 E. R. 484.

(5) 6 M. L. A. 53; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 13; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 493; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 46; 19 E. R. 20.

(6) 10 M. L. A. 403; 5 W. R. (P. C.) 11; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 609; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 164; 19 E. R. 1025.

(7) 34 I. A. 65; 9 Bom. L. R. 597; 11 C. W. N. 417; 5 C. L. J. 340; 4 A. L. J. 227; 2 M. L. T. 147; 17 M. L. J. 228; 29 A. 244 (P. C.).

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

joint family to his daughter warranted by the Hindu Law.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and B. Dube, for Ratan Lal, Respondents submitted that Ram Narain did not blend his professional income with the joint family funds. The real test is, Did Ram Narain throw his own self-acquired income into the common stock? There was no evidence that he did so. The system of accounts that he adopted only shewed that he made entries of all his receipts and expenses in one book. But he kept other account books also which have not been produced by the plaintiffs and which would have shown that he kept the funds of the joint family separate from his own. In the case of Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (7) there was one common stock, and the members of the family were father and son. Ram Narain became manager after 1890. Ram Narain had absolute power to dispose of his professional income, and that he did by purchasing properties in Ratan Lal's name for the benefit of his daughter. The purchase was not benami or ismfarzi. It was made with the deliberate object of providing for his daughter and her children. His statement made in 1899 and his conduct showed that the gift was intended and made. There was no reason for the transaction to be benami.

In Gopeekrist Gosain's case (5) the family was joint and the purchase was made by the father in his son's name. But here all the circumstances point to the fact that Ram Narain intended that the beneficial interest in the properties purchased with his funds should belong to the respondent and his wife. Reliance was placed on the following authorities: Obhoy Churn Mookerjee v. Panchanun Bose (8); Rajah Chundernath Roy v. Ramjoy Mozoomdar (9); Ngwab Azimut Ali Khan v. Hurdwaree Mull (10); Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (11).

(8) (1864) Marshall 564; 2 Hay 630.

(9) 15 W. R. (P. C.) 7; 6 B. L. R. 303; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 613.

(10) 13 M. I. A. 395; 14 W. R. (P. C.) 14; 6 B. L. R. (P. C.) 578; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 343; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 571; 20 E. R. 599.

(11) 14 I. A. 127; 15 C. 20; 11 Ind. Jur. 474; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 71; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 98; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 599.

The Courts below were right in respect of the properties to which section 517, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, applied.

Mr. Dunne in reply—The case in Marshall's Report (8) is distinguishable. It was under the Dayabhaga Law under which the money belonged to the father, but here the money was joint property.

The statement made by Ram Narain in 1899 is inadmissible in evidence. Section 32 (3), Evidence Act, does not apply as it is not against the interest of Ram Narain. He was interested in supporting a gift of a portion of the joint family property which he had illegally made. It was a statement made in his own favour rather than against himself. Some properties were purchased in Ratan Lal's name at auction sales, and both Courts have held that section 517, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, precludes the plaintiffs from claiming them. As to that reference was made to Bodh Singh Doodhuria v. Guneshchunder Sen (12); Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudri (13).

JUDGMENT.

LORD CHANCELLOR (LORD BUCKMASTER.)—In April 1867 Bakhshi Bishnu Narain died, leaving four sons, whose names in order of birth are: Raj Narain, Ram Narain, Bakht Narain and Suraj Narain. The family was a Hindu joint family, governed by the Mitakshara Law and possessing ancestral property. Accordingly, upon his father's death the eldest son, Raj Narain, became karta and so continued until his death in August 1890. His brother, Ram Narain, then succeeded and acted as karta until his death in October 1900. Disputes then arose between Bakht Narain and Suraj Narain as to Bakht Narain's claim to be registered as karta and as to their rights and the rights of their respective sons in the joint family properties. Some arrangement and reconciliation of this family quarrel, though one neither firm nor durable, seems to have been effected, but disputes broke out again with regard to the property, and four suits were instituted on the 3rd November 1903 by Bakht Narain, and a (12) 12 B. L. R. (P. C.) 317 at p. 329; 19 W. R. 356; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 253.

(13) 17 M. 282; 4 M. L. J. 64; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 195.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

fifth suit in 1905 by Suraj Narain, who claimed a half share in the entire joint estate. These appeals are consolidated appeals in those suits, the question for determination being whether certain very numerous properties acquired since the death of Bakshi Bishnu Narain are joint property. The appellants, who are certain members of the joint family, contend that they are. The respondent, who is the son-in-law of Ram Narain, says that they are not. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the present appellants. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reversed that decision. Hence these appeals.

Raj Narain had no son. Ram Narain also had no son, but had one daughter, to whom her father was much attached. She married Ratan Lal, the respondent, who contends that the disputed properties were either bought with his money or were given him by Ram Narain, and for those reasons are his own, or, at any rate, are not joint property.

The material facts that led up to this dispute are these:—From about the year 1864 to the year 1880, or, perhaps later, Raj Narain practised as a Pleader at Lucknow. In the year 1869 Ram Narain, who was then 23 years old, left Lucknow for Hardoi, and from that year onwards practised as a Pleader at Hardoi. He was successful, and later in life became a rich man. Before 1890, while Raj Narain was karta, and after 1890, when Ram Narain was karta, properties were acquired at Hardoi. They were taken in various names—that of Raj Narain, that of Ram Narain, that of Ratan Lal, those of Ratan Lal and of his son Madan Mohan Lal, and of other persons. The books of account of the family property were kept at Lucknow, where Raj Narain lived; but Ram Narain, who was at Hardoi, acted as manager of the properties at Hardoi as well before as after 1890. He bought properties at Hardoi, receiving, at any rate in one instance which is proved (that of the village Mahora), money from Lucknow to make the purchase, and he received income and made disbursements in respect of joint family property at Hardoi. But the purchases at Hardoi were made to a large extent not with joint family moneys, but with fees earned by Ram Narain in his practice as a Pleader and it is with these properties that these appeals are concerned. Under these circumstances their Lordships have taken as the first question to be answered in order to adjust the rights between the parties this question:—

Whether there is sufficient evidence to show that Ram Narain so blended his own property with the joint property as to make the whole joint property.

In the Hindu joint family the law is that, while it is possible that a member of the joint family should make separate acquisition, and keep moneys and property so acquired as his separate property, yet the question whether he has done so is to be judged from all the circumstances of the case. The latest authority is Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (7). The facts there were that in 1866 a partition of ancestral property had been effected between three brothers. The question arose in the case of one of the brothers who had thus taken his third share of the ancestral property. He had children. From the year 1852 onwards he had earned money as an official of the Indian Education Department, which he had paid into the same banking account as moneys admittedly joint. The question was whether these earnings were joint property. This Board held that they were. The dominant sentence in the judgment is as follows:—

"It is admitted that Durga Parshad and his sons lived together as a joint Hindu family, and it is established that there was a considerable nucleus of ancestral property in his hands after the partition. The onus was, therefore, on the respondent to prove that his subsequently acquired property was his separate estate."

Their Lordships call attention to the fact that the person here spoken of as having ancestral property "in his hands" was the karta. Down to 1890 Ram Narain was not the karta. After that date he was. The decision, therefore, applies in strictness to the present case only from that date. Further, in that case the father was the karta and not, as in the present case, a brother. But in the facts to be presently stated their Lordships find that the decision has a very close application to the present case.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

The position with regard to the private earnings of Ram Narain is this: It has not been established that any circumstances existed from which it could be inferred that there was any joint family estate in the separate earnings of the four brothers, and it must be accepted that the earnings of Ram Narain were monies which he was at perfect liberty to use in any manner that he thought fit. At the same time, it would be quite consistent with the principle which regulates joint family estates that he should, in fact, have brought them into the joint property and made them part of the whole. The question is: Has he done so?

There is really little or no direct evidence upon the point except the books of account that he kept, supplemented by his own verbal evidence in a suit that was decided in 1893. But this evidence is important, and, in their Lordships' view, throws considerable light upon the true history of the case. The book of account that he kept, apart from the books of a cloth business carried on at Hardoi and admittedly joint property, and separate registers and accounts of each of the villages, was a book which appears to have been in the same form and continued from 1869 down to the date of his death. It is not strictly an account book at all, but a book in which is recorded from day to day various payments and receipts of money from different sources, and undoubtedly it includes—and, so far as their Lordships are aware, it is the only book that includes—the receipts of his earnings as Pleader and his private payment. For the year 1876 the book has been placed in extenso in the record. This year has been selected as a typical year, and their Lordships have accepted it as characteristic of the accounts throughout the whole material period of time. In addition to receipts from his professional income, it shows receipts from several properties which are admittedly joint properties, and, although the books and materials were open for the respondents' inspection, and these books included the register of the villages admittedly owned by the joint family in the Hardoi district, it has been impossible to show that these entries do not include receipts from all the joint properties that were then under Ram Narain's management. The entries also undoubtedly show certain payments of joint accounts, and in the case of the Mahora village they show the receipt of money from the joint family estate and its application in the purchase of this property. There are entries of revenue payments in respect of villages which were joint property; of income received from such villages; of fees received for professional work as Pleader; of payments for the purchase of villages—e.g., the village of Samrihta, which was acquired in the name of Raj Narain, the karta, in July 1876; the villages of Kasmundi and Backharwa, acquired in the name of Raj Narain in the same month; the village of Masit, acquired in December 1876 in the name of Ram Narain; of payments made to servants at Lucknow on account of their pay, and so on. The account may be called an "omnibus" account, into which Ram Narain's professional fees are carried in common with other items such as described, and from these mingled sources a balance is struck day by day, and the whole account is abstracted and summarised at the end of the year. The receipts amount to Rs. 27,205-13-8, of which Rs. 2,866-4-9 are fees, Rs. 12 are presents, Rs. 1,578-3-6 are income from "personal villages on account of village Mahora" and from "joint village", Rs. 2,819-6-3 are "from the account of the personal and the leased villages," and so on. On the other side are "purchases, Rs. 19,056-14-0." among which the villages of Masit, Samrihta, and Kasmundi are found. As the result, a credit balance of Rs. 189-1-6 at the beginning of the year becomes a credit balance of Rs. 141-11-1 at the end of the year.

Now there is nothing whatever to show that out of this account payments were from time to time transmitted to the joint family accounts that were kept at Lucknow, and this, in their Lordships' opinion, is a most material matter because, if no such remittances were made, it follows that the balances that were carried forward from time to time and brought into account against future purchases were blended balances of Ram Narain's own earnings and of joint monies and that they remain so blended throughout the whole period of time. It is quite true that, as time went on, other monies were also entered in these accounts which cannot be regarded as joint. There were monies received from Kishan Lal and Ratan Lal, from his daughter, and, it may even be, from other sources, and it is urged that these monies cannot possibly be regarded as blended with the joint family estate, and that, therefore, Ram Narain's private earnings ought equally to be regarded as outside the joint property. But this argument is not conclusive, because these monies, regarded as the monies of Kishan Lal, Ratan Lal and his wife, were not the monies of people sharing in the joint estate, and were incapable of being blended in the manner suggested and they would remain monies for which Ram Narain would be liable to account; but his own means stood in a different position, and if their association with the joint family monies in the account in the manner mentioned would be sufficient evidence of their being blended, the mere fact that other monies were there also would not necessarily destroy the value of the inference.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

The respondents had the means of showing before the Subordinate Judge that this system of account could be and was explained, e.g., that this was but an omnibus book, and that he kept a separate joint property account. The respondents did not do so. The Subordinate Judge had all the books before him. Their Lordships have not. He concluded that the appellants were right. Their Lordships are not prepared to differ from him as to the effect of the books, all of which he saw and some of which their Lordships have seen. They have looked carefully to see what the Judicial Commissioners held on appeal as regards this part of the case. They express themselves as "perplexed" by the entries and found it "impossible to arrive at any certain conclusion as to the system on which these various account books were kept up." Their Lordships are not prepared to stop at the point of perplexity. They think that the books blend Ram Narain's professional earnings with his receipts and payments on account of joint properties, and thus afford evidence upon the question under consideration.

A second and most important head of evidence is found in a deposition made by Ram Narain on the 5th August 1893. This was three years after he became karta. He says:—

"The money was of our family, partly on account of savings from my practice and partly from remittances from Lucknow. The sale-deeds are in names of Raj Narain and some in my name too. I did not send any money in cash to Raj Narain from Hardoi. He never asked me to send."

And in cross-examination:—

"Money was not sent from Hardoi, as property was being purchased there. The proceeds of sale of ancestral villages and other ancestral money were used in villages in this district and also in other work of the family. No profit was [sic] ever took place in our family. My father had four sons: viz, Raj Narain, eldest, myself, Bakht Narain, and Suraj Narain. We were all joint and all family property was joint. Partition never took place. One member of the family works as manager. Raj Narain was manager and now I am manager. I, Bakht Narain, and Suraj Narain are still joint"

Their Lordships cannot find that the Judicial Commissioners gave any effect to this evidence. It is plain and directly to the point, and they have found no answer to it.

This conclusion, however, does not determine the case. Some of the properties that are in dispute are properties that were purchased in the name of the respondent, Ratan Lal, and it is still open to him to show that each of those transactions represented a gift from Ram Narain to himself. This question also is singularly destitute of direct evidence. There is an undoubted foundation from which such an intention could be readily assumed. Ram Narain was on terms of very close and intimate affection with his daughter. She was his sole child, and the formal phrase nurchashmi, under which he constantly referred to her, conveyed more than a formal meaning. Ratan Lal, his son-in-law, also shared his affection, and seems to have made considerable sacrifices in return. He allowed his wife to stay in her father's house, and in the disputes which divided the family he took the side of Ram Narain against his own parents, and it is said, was, therefore, disinherited. Ram Narain undoubtedly received from his son-in-law monies for profitable investment, and the suggestion that these monies might be regarded as returned by the payment of certain household expenses is one repugnant to the best ideas and traditions of a Hindu family, and one which their Lordships wholly reject. It is, therefore, easy to infer that Ram Narain had many motives which would prompt him to make abundant provision for his daughter and her husband, neither of whom would in the absence of such provision have any share in his estate.

SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL.

But even with this presumption, the mere fact of purchases of properties in the name of Ratan Lal would not of itself be sufficient to show that they were intended as a gift, but their Lordships think that evidence is not wanting to make the inference complete, and that evidence is contained in the statement of Ram Narain himself. Their Lordships are in entire agreement with the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judicial Commissioners in holding that the statement of Ram Narain made in 1899 is properly admitted in evidence. It was a statement which, whether the property was joint or whether it was his own, it was against his own personal interest to make, since in effect it declared that the properties there referred to were those of Ratan Lal; nor do their Lordships see any reason why it should be discredited; and if accepted it furnishes sufficient evidence, taken in connection with the circumstances, to support the claim of Ratan Lal. It is in these terms:—

“The capital outlay required to pay the arrears of revenue was provided partly by me and partly by Ratan Lal. The profits will be enjoyed entirely by him. I manage this estate for him and also his other Zemindari in this District. I have bought a lot of Zemindari in his name, in order to make provision for him, as against my adopted son, who would be my heir.”

Their Lordships do not think that this evidence and that given in 1893 are irreconcilable. The former related to a period different from the latter, and it does not follow that they cover the same transactions. Upon the view which their Lordships have already expressed, Ram Narain did blend his own monies with the joint family monies, and purchased property in his own name and that of Raj Narain which must be regarded as joint estate; but this does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the properties purchased in the name of Ratan Lal were of the same character. It is admitted that there were abundant monies coming from the private earnings of Ram Narain to furnish the consideration for these purchases, and that he was at full liberty to use them for that purpose if he so desired. But if once the intention to buy them for Ratan Lal be accepted, as their Lordships think it must, there only remains the question as to whether these monies had been so dealt with by Ram Narain before his purchase as to put it outside his power to gratify the intention of making the gift. The material before their Lordships does not lead them to this conclusion. Remembering that Ram Narain had full power to deal with his earnings as he thought fit, the fact that he blended those that were not otherwise used does not mean that every entry of a purchase in the book is an entry of a transaction so dealt with that it must be regarded as joint property. If, for example, having monies of Ratan Lal's in his own hands, he either by using his own monies or by borrowing on his own account obtained the funds necessary for the purchase of the property in question, and such properties were bought with the intention of benefiting Ratan Lal, the mere fact that the transactions were recorded in the books which also recorded the receipts of his own and the joint monies would not prevent them being used for that purpose, and this view appears to have been taken by the Subordinate Judge; but if this be so, it appears to their Lordships to apply equally to purchases made with Ram Narain's monies alone, when once it is accepted that they were used with the intention of making a gift. The learned Judicial Commissioners appear to think that even assuming that they had been blended in the first instance, there was nothing to prevent Ram Narain from making this use of them and there would appear to be some support for this view in the fact that similar joint monies were apparently used for the endowment of the daughter of Ikbāl Narain

NANDA LAL v. UMES CHANDRA DAS.

Their Lordships do not, however, think it is necessary to rely on this circumstance. For reasons already given, they think that the gift in favour of Ratan Lal may be regarded as established so far, but so far only, as the properties are concerned in the Hardoi district, which were bought in the name of Ratan Lal alone.

There only remains one further point for consideration, and that affects certain properties, Nos. 1—4 inclusive and No. 32 in List 5, which were purchased at auction at a sale under order of the Court in the name of Ratan Lal. Their Lordships were satisfied that any claim to these properties by the appellants is defeated by section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty (1) that these appeals ought to be allowed in part; (2) that the decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh respectively, dated the 30th day of October 1909, and the decrees of the Court of the Additional Judge of Hardoi respectively, dated the 27th day of August 1908, as regards the following properties which have not been in question upon these appeals ought to be affirmed: List V annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1905, Item 23, Mauza Gobardhanpur, 2 biswas; List VIA annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1908, Item 1, houses and shops in Hardoi Khas; List VIII annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1908, Item 4., decree in suit of Pandit Ratan Lal v. Sripal Singh, and the business carried on in the cloth shop at Hardoi; (3) that it ought to be declared that the appellants are also entitled to the following properties: List V annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1908, Item 30, Kashmiri Bagh Sitlaji, Item 31, half share of the land at Pakra; List VIA annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1908, Item 19, land at Suklapur, Item 20, land at Thok Khala, Item 21, land at Thok Uncha; List VIII, annexed to plaint in Suit No. 1 of 1908, Item 34, decree against Pandit Ram Narain, Item 35, agreement for costs; (4) that the appellants' claim to the remaining properties ought to be dismissed; (5) that in other respects, except as to costs, the decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner ought to be set aside; (6) that subject to the aforesaid declarations and modifications the decrees of the Court of the Additional Judge ought to be restored; and (7) that the parties ought to bear their own costs of these appeals.

Appeals allowed in part.

Solicitors for the Appellants: Messrs. James Gray & Son.

Solicitors for the Respondents: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 134
OF 1915.

April 20, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and
Mr. Justice Newbould.

NANDA LAL BANERJEE—PLAINTIFF—
APPELLANT

versus

UMES CHANDRA DAS—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 167—Incumbrance, annulment of—"Date of sale," meaning of.

The words "date of sale" in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean the date when the sale is confirmed, and not the date when the property is actually sold to the purchaser. This is especially so where the sale took place when the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, under which the purchaser could acquire no interest until the sale certificate was issued, was in force. [p. 998, col. 1.]

Yusuf Gazi v. Asmatullah, 15 Ind. Cas. 430; 17 C. W. N. 440; 16 C. L. J. 131, not followed.

Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das, 7 C. W. N. 552, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24 Perganas, dated the 12th September 1914, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur, dated the 30th June 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbarty and Ramtaran Chatterjee, for the Appellant.—The case now set up for the defence is that the plaintiff had knowledge of the incumbrance, viz, the dar-puṭni lease but no such point was taken in the written statement, nor was there any issue raised on this point. So the defendant should not be allowed to raise this point not taken in the written statement. It is a question of fact, and the defendant was bound to state it specifically in the written statement.

NANDA LAL V. UMES CHANDRA DAS.

Then even if the plaintiff had any knowledge of the incumbrance, that knowledge is not sufficient because he had no notice of the incumbrance as a purchaser. A notice is no notice unless it is taken by a person interested or bound to take notice. The word "notice" in section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, contemplates "notice by a purchaser as such." To annul the incumbrance notice to the Collector under section 167 may be given within a year from the date of sale. "Date of sale" in section 167 should be taken to mean "day of confirmation of sale." The notice given in this case within a year from the confirmation of sale was a good notice and was sufficient to annul the incumbrance. The section says that the incumbrance is annulled as soon as the notice is given to the Collector.

The purchaser, however, has no title to the property unless the sale is confirmed. So he cannot give any notice for the annulment of incumbrance prior to the confirmation of sale, for it would be an anomaly if the incumbrance can be annulled by the purchaser prior to the accrual of title to the property purchased. See Banko Behary Das v. Krishna Chandra Bhowmick (1).

Babu Mohesh Chunder Banerji, for Babu Jyotish Chunder Hazrah, for the Respondent.—The point that the purchaser had notice of the incumbrance at the time of sale was taken in the written statement, and an express issue was raised on this point. At the time of sale the plaintiff had knowledge of the incumbrance but still he did not give notice for its annulment within a year from the date of sale.

As regards the question within what period notice for the annulment of incumbrance should be given, I rely on the express wording of the provisions of section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. There is no ambiguity in the language used in the section and section 167, sub-section (1), says that notice is to be given within a year from the date of sale or the date on which the purchaser first had notice of the incumbrance. The case of Yusuf Gazi v. Asmat- ullah (2) supports my contention. "Date of sale" cannot by any stretch of language mean date of confirmation of sale. If the Legislature had in mind "date of confirmation," there is no reason why those words were not used but instead of them the expression "date of sale" is used.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore. The plaintiff sued for a declaration of his right to a putni which he had purchased at a sale for arrears of rent held under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The sale at which the plaintiff purchased took place on the 16th December 1907. Litigation ensued after the sale and the sale was not confirmed until the 5th September 1908. On the 22nd September 1905, the plaintiff took possession and the present defendant then set up a dur-putni right. On the 8th March 1909, an application was made under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to annul the defendant's encumbrance and the notice was served on the 13th April 1909. The present suit was brought on the 12th April 1912. The defence as raised by the defendant in his written statement was, first of all, that the plaintiff was the benamidar of the defaulting tenant. That was found against the defendant. So was also the defence raised that no notice had been served under the terms of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But the suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had notice of the defendant's encumbrance before he purchased the property and, therefore, he was out of time under the terms of section 167 in not having served the notice to annul the defendant's encumbrance in time. It has been argued in this appeal that that point was not raised in the defence and no issue had been settled with regard to it and that the defendant ought not to have been allowed to enter into that defence. There is a good deal to say with regard to that. In the view that I take of the authorities of this Court, I am unable to agree with the view of the learned

(1) 9 Ind. Cas. 528; 18 C. W. N. 349; 18 C. L. J. 170 on L. P. A. 21 Ind. Cas. 419.

(2) 15 Ind. Cas. 430; 17 C. W. N. 440; 16 C. L. J. 131.

NANDA LAL v. UMES CHANDRA DAS.

Judge of the lower Appellate Court that the date of the sale was the 16th December 1907, and not the date on which the sale was confirmed, namely, the 5th September 1908. If the 'date of sale' mentioned in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is the date when the sale is confirmed, then it is quite clear that the notice that was served on the 13th April 1909 was within one year from the date of the sale. The sale to the plaintiff was made under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 and, under section 316 of that Code, the title to the property sold in execution vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale and not before. Section 65 of the present Code of Civil Procedure is in different terms. The question as to what is the meaning of the words "date of sale" as used in the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act has formed the subject of judicial decision in certain cases before this Court. The first case that reference may be made to is the case of Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das (3), where Maclean, C. J., and Mr. Justice Stevens held that the words "date of sale" used in section 169, sub-section (1), clause (c), of the Bengal Tenancy Act meant the date of the confirmation of sale and not the actual date of sale. It is quite true that that decision was on section 169, but there cannot be any difference, so far as I can see, between the meaning of the words 'date of sale' as used in section 169 and in section 167. It is quite true that subsequent to that decision, the Legislature amended section 169 by altering the words 'date of sale' to 'the date of the confirmation of sale,' but still the decisions of this Court remain unaffected that the words 'date of sale' used in the Act as they existed before the amendment meant the date when the sale was confirmed. There is no reason why that decision should not govern the words 'date of sale' as used in section 167. The next decision that reference may be made to is the decision in the case of Yusuf Gazi v. Asmatullah (2), a decision of Mr. Justice Brett and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin. There the learned Judges held that the words 'date of sale' in section 167 meant the date on which the sale of the holding or tenure had actually taken place and the reason on which they based their judgment is this: that as section

(3) 7 C. W. N. 552.

169 as amended referred to the date of the confirmation of the sale, therefore, in section 167 where the words 'the date of the confirmation of the sale' did not appear, the words 'date of sale' must refer to a period other than the date of the confirmation of the sale. In my opinion, there is a manifest fallacy. Section 167 and section 169 prior to the amendment both used the same words, namely, the words "date of sale." It was judicially declared in this Court that the words 'date of sale' in section 169 meant the date of the confirmation of the sale and the Legislature in amending section 169 clearly did not consider the terms of section 167, and section 167 remained unaffected by that amendment. I think that the learned Judges who decided the case of Yusuf Gazi Asmatullah (2) were not justified in distinguishing the case, or, at any rate, in departing from the decision in the case of Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das (3), on the ground that by a subsequent amendment of section 169 different words had been used to those that appeared in section 167. It may be doubted whether the same learned Judges in a subsequent case did not to some extent go back upon that decision, because in the case of Taibatannessa Chowdhurani v. Pravabati Dasi (4) those learned Judges came to the conclusion that in certain circumstances the words 'date of sale' as mentioned in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act meant the date of the confirmation of the sale. With all due respect to the learned Judges, the conduct of a defendant cannot alter the meaning of the words used by the Legislature in a particular section of an Act. I think the learned Judges in the decision reported as Taibatannessa Chowdhurani v. Pravabati Dasi (4) have shown that in certain cases at any rate, the words 'date of sale' as used in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean the date when the sale is confirmed. The next decision that has been referred to is the decision of a Judge sitting singly in this Court; that is, the decision of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea in the case of Banko Behary Das v. Krishna Chandra Bhowmick (1). There the learned Judge held distinctly that the words 'date of sale' used in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act meant the date when the sale was confirmed and he did so relying upon the decision of this Court

(4) 4 Ind. Cas. 750; 10 C. L. J. 640.

KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJI v. SARAT KUMARI DEBI.

in the case of Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das (3). It is quite true that that decision is not binding on us; but the opinion of the learned Judge is, of course, entitled to the highest respect. In his view, the case was covered by the case of Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das (3), and I think he rightly held so. The case of Matangini Chaudhurani v. Sreenath Das (3), which is the first of these authorities is not distinguishable from the present case. It is quite true that against the decision of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea a Letters Patent Appeal was preferred; but the judgment of the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent Appeal rested on grounds other than that as to the meaning of the words 'date of sale' as used in section 167, but they cast no doubt upon the correctness of the decision of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea in that respect. I think the words 'date of sale', especially where the sale took place under the Code of 1882 and where the purchaser could acquire no interest until the sale certificate was issued, mean clearly the date of the confirmation of the sale. To hold otherwise would practically in some cases take away from the plaintiff the right to annul encumbrances at all because, as in the present case where the plaintiff has been found to have known of the encumbrance before the date of the actual sale and litigation ensued, and the sale was not confirmed for a considerable time after the date of the sale, if the date referred to in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act be the date of the actual sale, then the purchaser will have no period within which he can annul encumbrances unless he elects to annul the encumbrances before his title to the property has been finally determined. I think that the view that was expressed by Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea in the case of Banko Behary Das v. Krishna Chandra Bhowmick (1) is the correct view and that the words 'date of sale' referred to in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean the date when the sale is confirmed, and not the date when the property is actually sold to the purchaser. That being so, even if this defence was open to the defendant in this case, I think it was not sufficient to bar the plaintiff's suit. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on his finding that the plaintiff was out of time for the purpose of annulling the encumbrance. There were other issues arising on the merits and they have not been determined. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court to have the appeal re-heard with reference to the other issues which have not been disposed of. Costs will abide the result of the re-hearing by the lower Appellate Court.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Case sent back.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

IN THE MATTER OF APPEAL No. 87 OF 1914.

January 9, 1917.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt.,
Chief Justice, and Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt.

Re KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJI AND OTHERS - DEBTORS—PETITIONERS

versus

Srimati SARAT KUMARI DEBI—
CREDITOR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Costs awarded against nominal party put forward by real party, whether can be recovered from real party—Inherent power to award costs—Appellate Insolvency Jurisdiction of High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151.

Proceedings for the adjudication of the petitioners in insolvency, instituted in the Original Side of High Court by certain persons in the name of a lady, were dismissed with costs against the lady by an order of the Court, and an appeal against the order preferred in the name of the lady was also dismissed with costs by the Appellate Court:

Held, on a substantive application of the petitioners to the Appellate Court that the real people who put forward the lady to institute the proceedings for the adjudication in insolvency should be made to pay the costs of the proceedings awarded against the lady and taxed by the Taxing Officer, although those persons were not present when the taxation of costs took place on notice to the lady, and although one of them did not live or carry on business within the limits of the Original Side of the High Court. [p. 1000, col. 1; p. 1001 col. 2.]

The High Court in its Appellate Insolvency Jurisdiction has ample inherent power to make an order in regard to the costs of the proceedings for adjudication in insolvency, where it is satisfied upon the facts of the case that the proceedings have been an abuse of the process of the Court. [p. 1000, col. 2.]

Rule granted on the application of the petitioners on the 21st December 1916.

FACTS of the case will appear from 37 Ind. Cas. 71.

Mr. N. Sarkar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. D. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case there was a firm consisting of certain persons Ketokey Charan Banerjee, Apurna Chunder Banerjee, Keshini Charan Banerjee, Gyanada Churn Banerjee and Nagendra Nath Banerjee, who, as I understand, it has been found, had certain interest in the firm. The business was carried on under the style of A. C. Chatterjee & Co. The first four of the above-mentioned persons were adjudicated insolvents upon the application of one Sarat Kumari Debi who is the wife of one Surendra Nath Banerjee, and it has been found that Surendra Nath Banerjee and Nagendra Nath Banerjee were joint in business. The basis of the application for the adjudication in insolvency was that certain shares in the business had been assigned to an individual whose name was Dinonath Mukerjee and the order of adjudication was made upon that allegation. After two or three investigations, it was found that the assignment to Dinonath was an assignment to him as a benamdar for Nagendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee. It has also been found by this Court that Sarat Kumari Debi was not a real creditor of the firm at all but that she was put forward merely as a blind for Nagendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee, so that the real position was this that Nagendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee were in reality presenting the petition for the adjudication in insolvency based upon an assignment which was apparently made to a third person but was in reality made to themselves, and then having got that adjudication they were putting forward Sarat Kumari as a creditor whereas they were themselves in reality making a claim as creditors in the adjudication. It should further be added that upon the application of the petitioners, Greaves, J., by an order dated 4th August 1916 annulled the adjudication order. The Court of Appeal having held that the application of Sarat Kumari Debi was not the application of a bona fide creditor of the firm, and her claim having consequently been dismissed with costs, the petitioner now comes before the Court asking for an order that the real people behind Sarat Kumari Debi should be made to pay the costs of the proceedings connected with the claim of Sarat Kumari Debi as a creditor in the insolvency, and this application is based upon the allegation that the proceedings by Ragendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee in the name of Sarat Kumari Debi were an abuse of the process of the Court.

KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJI V. SARAT KUMARI DEBI.

The first point taken by the learned Counsel who showed cause against this Rule was that this Court had no jurisdiction to make the order. The section of the Civil Procedure Code to which our attention was drawn was section 151, which provides as follows:— "Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

As regards the inherent power of the Court to deal with an abuse of the process of the Court there is authority to be found in the case of Jointee Chunder Sein v. Anundo Lall Doss (1). I need not refer to the facts of that case, but it is an authority for saying that this Court has ample power to make an order with regard to the costs of the proceedings, where it is satisfied upon the facts of the case that the proceedings have been an abuse of the process of the Court; and in my judgment there is no doubt that on the facts of this case we have jurisdiction to make the order asked for if we think it proper so to do.

The next point raised is that inasmuch as Nagendra Nath Banerjee lived outside the jurisdiction of the original side of this Court and he did not carry on business within the limits of the original jurisdiction of this Court, we could not now make any order as against him, it being admitted that Surendra Nath Banerjee was within the jurisdiction of this Court. As regards Nagendra Nath Banerjee in my judgment the position is this: This Court has held that in reality he was one of the two persons who came to the Court for the purpose of making use of the process of the Court, and if we come to the conclusion on the facts of the case that not only did he make use of the process of the Court but also that he abused the process of the Court, I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction to make an order not only in his case but also in the case of Surendra Nath Banerjee.

(1) 14 W. R. O. C. 1 at p. 4.

KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJI v. SARAT KUMARI DEBI.

The third point that was raised by the learned Counsel, Mr. Bose, was that on the facts of the case no order as to costs ought to be made. In my judgment this Rule should be made absolute. I think that I have already stated the facts sufficiently to show that from the beginning to the end the proceedings instituted by Nagendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee were an abuse of the process of the Court. In the first instance, as I have already said, they put forward an assignment which purported to be made to a third person as a basis of the insolvency proceedings, whereas it has been found as a fact that the assignment was in reality made to these two. They then put forward the lady Sarat Kumari Debi, who was the wife of Surendra Nath Banerjee, as a bona fide creditor, whereas it has been found as a fact that she was not a bona fide creditor; and for the purpose of my judgment and to make the statement of facts quite clear, I propose to read what was said by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee on the hearing of the appeal as follows: "The essence of the matter is that her account opens with two sums, Rs. 2,487-8-6 and Rs. 14,233-13-6 respectively; in respect of one of these sums, the lady was a benamdar of her husband, while in respect of the other, she was a benamdar of her brother-in-law. True it is that there is no evidence of the source of the subsequent advances, but in the absence of tangible proof, we cannot assume that those sums belonged rather to her husband than to her brother-in-law. There is, further, a significant admission by Nagendra Nath Banerjee that he and his brother, Surendra Nath Banerjee, are joint, and this account may lend some support to a possible theory that both the brothers used the name of the respondent as their benamdar. But whatever the real state of affairs may be, one cardinal fact is established beyond controversy, namely, that the respondent is not a creditor of the insolvents. How much of the sum which stands in her name is her husband's money and how much thereof is her brother-in-law's money, we do not know; but if she be not a creditor of the insolvents, as I hold she is not, the conclusion is irresistible that her name must be removed from the category of the creditors of the insolvents in these proceedings". I ought to have said that Sarat Kumari Debi is a purdanashin lady with, as I understand, no property of her own.

Now, under those circumstances I think in such proceedings as these, when they have failed in consequence of the decision of this Court, and when, if the costs are taxed, there are no means of getting them paid by Sarat Kumari Debi, she having no property, and when we find that the real people behind her were first of all her husband, and secondly, her brother-in-law, who have used her name in connection with these proceedings, it would be most unjust if we were prevented from making a proper order as to costs. In my judgment there has been an abuse of the process of the Court. Consequently the costs which have been taxed with respect to this matter, which I understand, amount to Rs. 1,872, should be recovered from Nagendra Nath Banerjee and Surendra Nath Banerjee.

There is one final point taken by the learned Counsel, and that was that his client was not present when the taxation of the costs took place. It is, however, admitted that notice was given to Sarat Kumari Debi of the fact that the taxation of the costs was going to take place, and if either of his clients had desired (she being the wife of one and the sister-in-law of the other, and the facts must have been known to them) to dispute any item of the taxation, they should have appeared through their attorney to investigate the costs. I do not think in this case any further taxation of costs ought to take place.

My learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee reminds me that there was one other point to which I have not referred, and that was this: It was contended by Mr. Bose that inasmuch as the appeal was heard by a Bench constituted by myself, Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Mookerjee, this matter could not be disposed of by the Bench constituted as at present by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee and myself. There is nothing in that contention, for this reason. This is not a question of review of the judgment which was passed by us sitting together with Mr. Justice Woodroffe. This is a substantive application made to us to-day, and in my judgment there cannot be any doubt that the Bench as at present constituted has full jurisdiction to deal with this matter. It would probably have been more convenient if the application could have been made to the Bench when Mr. Justice Woodroffe was sitting with us, and we could have been glad to have had his assistance but I have no doubt that the Bench as at present constituted has full jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

PARSHOTTAM VERIBHAI v. CHHATRASANGJI MADHAVSANGJI.

The Rule is made absolute with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1128 OF 1915.

December 18, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Batchelor and Mr. Justice Shah.

PARSHOTTAM VERIBHAI AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS — APPELLANTS

versus

CHHATRASANGJI MADHAVSANGJI
THAKOR—PLAINTIFF — RESPONDENT.

Broach and Kaira Incumbered Estates Act (XXI of 1881), s. 28—Mortgage by talukdar, validity of—Mortgagee, right of, to recover mortgage money—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65, applicability of.

Section 65 of the Contract Act has no application to a case of transfer of property by way of mortgage, where the transfer is perfectly valid when made and remains valid for a certain period of time fixed by the law, i. e., the lifetime of the mortgagor. [p. 1002, col. 2.]

Therefore, where a mortgage effected by a talukdar becomes void under section 28 of the Broach and Kaira Incumbered Estates Act, 1881, after the death of the talukdar, the mortgagee is not entitled to recover back the money advanced by him on the mortgage. [p. 1002, col. 2.]

Javerbhai Jorabhai v. Gordhan Narsi, 28 Ind. Cas. 442; 17 Bom. L. R. 259; 39 B. 358, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 127 of 1914, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Umreth, in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1913.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a deed of mortgage made in March, 1894, by his father is null and void. The plaintiff also sought to recover possession of the property.

The plaint stated that the plaintiff is, and his father was, a talukdar of Kherda, and the mortgage-deed was void under section 28 of the Broach and Kaira Incumbered Estates Act, XXI of 1881, after the death of the mortgagor, the plaintiff's father. The defendants are the representatives of the original mortgagee.

The lower Appellate Court has decided in favour of the plaintiff upon the main contention, and nothing has been said in the argument before us to lead us to doubt the accuracy of that conclusion. Under section 28 of Act XXI of 1881 it is provided that in circumstances such as we have here no mortgage shall be valid as to any time beyond the natural life of the mortgagor talukdar.

Mr. Thakor, however, on behalf of the defendants, has contended that they are entitled to recover back the money advanced by them on the mortgage and that until this restitution is made to them, the plaintiff has no right to recover possession of the property. The learned Pleader has relied in the first instance upon section 65 of the Indian Contract Act. That section, however, in my judgment is of no application. For the case before us is not a case where an agreement is discovered to be void or where a contract became void. The present is a case rather of a transfer of property by way of mortgage, the transfer being perfectly valid when made and remaining valid for a certain period of time fixed by the law, i. e., the lifetime of the mortgagor.

Then the learned Pleader called in aid of his contention this Court's decision in Javerbhai Jorabhai v. Gordhan Narsi (1). That case must, however, as I think, be distinguished. It was a case under the Bhagdari Act, 1862, and the consideration for the mortgage failed ab initio. In those circumstances the Court held that it was open to the plaintiff mortgagees to recover under the covenant, which provided that if there should be any hindrance or obstruction concerning the house, the defendants and their property, their heirs and representatives would be liable for any loss which the plaintiffs might suffer and for the moneys which the plaintiffs had advanced. In other words, in that case, since the mortgage was void from the beginning, the event contemplated in the covenant had in fact happened, and the plaintiffs were entitled to take advantage of that happening. The covenant in the present case is in form very like that in Javerbhai's case (1). It runs in these words: "If any manner of obstruction or hindrance be caused or any claim or right be preferred as regards this land, I personally, my heirs and representatives and children are to be answerable for your amount in respect of the mortgage." But it seems to me impossible to say here that the event contemplated in the covenant has in fact happened. For the defendants actually obtained possession of the mortgaged property and retained possession of it until the death of the mortgagor, i.e., for a total period of about nineteen years.

(1) 28 Ind. Cas. 442; 17 Bom. L. R. 259; 39 B. 358,

KAURA v. KALU RAM.

Now the parties to this mortgage and this covenant must, I think, be taken to have contracted with reference to the existing law, and the covenant must be read as limited to the time during which the mortgage remained valid under that law. During all that time, as I have said, there was no hindrance or obstruction or any other circumstance which could call the terms of the covenant into operation. It is true that the defendants' term of possession has been shorter than it would have been if the law had been otherwise. But I cannot see how the defendants can lawfully complain of that. They must in my view be regarded as having taken their chance as to the length of their possession. As the learned District Judge observes: "Presumably the mortgagor and mortgagee knew how they stood, and I suppose the mortgagee took proper care of his interests in view of the unsatisfactory nature of his security." I am of opinion, for these reasons, that the contract between the parties has effectually been carried out, subject to the law of the country according to which they must be taken to have contracted. It follows, therefore, that the defendants are not entitled to any money compensation for handing over possession to the plaintiff.

The appeal, therefore, in my opinion, fails and should be dismissed with costs.

SHAW, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2617 OF 1916.

February 19, 1917.

Present:—Sir Donald Johnstone, Kt.,
Chief Judge.

KAURA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—
APPELLANTS

versus

KALU RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Appeal, second—Onus, question of—Question of law and fact—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 41.

In a case where, in the absence of all evidence on an issue, a decision is arrived at on a wrong laying of onus, the question of onus would be a question of law and a second appeal would be competent. [p. 1004, col. 2.]

It is otherwise, however, where the onus having been wrongly laid, the case is nevertheless decided on a weighing of evidence on both sides. [p. 1004, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 7th July 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Mianwali, dated the 8th November 1915, decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Mr. B. N. Kapur, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are Kaura, Sarfaraz, Allah Ditta and Khanan, sons of Bahadur, and the defendants the two sons and a son's widow of the late Thakur Das. In 1878 we find, (a) Thakur Dass entered in Revenue Records as malik-i-adna of 53 kanals in the kachhi (land subject to river action), he having acquired by purchase from plaintiffs' father; and (b) plaintiffs as the ala maliks of the same. In 1904 Kaura plaintiff and one Ahmadyar applied for portion of some 13,000 kanals known as Thul shamilat-i-deh, and the Revenue authorities found themselves face to face with the question of the rival rights in this shamilat of ala and adna maliks, the plaintiffs and Ahmadyar being among the ala maliks. On 21st July 1904, the Revenue Assistant ruled that only adna maliks were entitled to a share, the ala maliks' rights being limited to taking 6 per cent. calculated on the Government revenue. On this basis in 1907 an area of 75 kanals 5 marlas (now in suit) was allotted to defendants. Plaintiffs' case is that their father Bahadur sold to Thakur Das only the adna rights in the 53 kanals and not any corresponding share in shamilat.

KAURA V. KALU RAM.

Defendants pleaded that the sale included share in shamilat and that plaintiffs are estopped by their own declarations and conduct from denying this.

The first Court laid upon defendants the onus of proving what the sale included and after a lengthy discussion found the point in favour of plaintiffs. It also considered the grounds on which estoppel was set up and held that there was no waiver or estoppel.

The lower Appellate Court reversed this decision and set aside the decree granted by the first Court. Its judgment is not to my mind very clear, but in a general way it may be said that the learned District Judge on the authorities seems to find that there is much to be said for the presumption that the sale, though it did not mention share of shamilat, did include that, and that the conduct of Kaura and Sarfaraz, plaintiffs, coupled with the inaction of all the plaintiffs from 1904 (when the Revenue Assistant found in principle against them), tells heavily against them.

When this second appeal by the plaintiffs was laid before Mr. Justice Leslie Jones in Chambers, he admitted it with the remark: "Is the onus rightly placed?" This has led to a preliminary objection that the question of imposition of onus probandi not being a question of law, no second appeal lies, and in support certain rulings have been quoted—Sadhu Ram v. Musummat Bai (1), Nur Ilahi v. Municipal Committee, Delhi (2) (only indirectly in point); but in my opinion the problem cannot be put in this naked form: much depends upon the nature of the case and the way in which the case has been handled in the lower Appellate Court. I distinguish, for instance, between a case in which, in the absence of all evidence on an issue, a decision is arrived at on a wrong laying of onus, and a case in which, onus having been wrongly laid, the case is never heless decided on a weighing of evidence for and against. In the present case the lower Appellate Court has noticed all the substantial matters favourable to each party and has come to a conclusion. It first points out that there was no deed of sale to Thakur Das but merely an entry in the 1878 Settlement Record that he had bought the land from Bahadur for Rs. 210 and was in possession and was adna malik. Then it discusses such rulings as Ram Das v. Amir Shah (3) and Mr. Thorburn's Settlement Report explaining the creation of adna milkiyat; quotes with approval the Settlement Commissioner's judgment of December 2nd, 1904, which insists upon a presumption in favour of Thakur Das; adverts to Sarfaraz's statement of 29th June 1904, in which he seems to give a sort of half-hearted assent to defendant's claim; refers to the statement of Kaura plaintiff and 11 others made on 13th September 1907, to the effect that they had seen the spot and were satisfied with the partition. Finally, after discussing and distinguishing further judgments as to the right presumption in such cases, it adverts to the plaintiffs' long silence and their conduct. Now, though in my opinion the initial onus was on defendants, yet the facts and considerations set forth by the lower Appellate Court lead fairly to the conclusion that the onus was shifted to plaintiffs by reason of them; and after all, the lower Appellate Court never says the initial onus was on plaintiffs it is only after discussing a good many features of the case that it says, as it were, In these circumstances the onus is on plaintiffs.

I have thus disposed of grounds 1 and 2 of appeal. Ground 3 raises no question of law. Ground 4 is merely a defence against possible attack. Ground 5 is now useless, as the lower Appellate Court's decision as to what was sold must stand. Ground 7 has not been argued.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(3) 113 P. R. 1901; 34 P. L. R. 1902.

(1) 66 P. R. 1898.

(2) 68 P. R. 1897.

KEDAR NATH DEY ROY v. LAKHI KANTA DEY.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 507
OF 1914.

May 11, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and
Mr. Justice Newbould.

KEDAR NATH DEY ROY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

LAKHI KANTA DEY—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182, cl. (5).—
Step-in-aid of execution—Application for summoning witnesses as to standard of measurement.*

During the pendency of a substantial application for execution of a decree for possession of certain property, an application made by the decree-holder for summoning witnesses for the purpose of determining the standard of measurement without which he could not, in the opinion of the Court, obtain execution of the decree by delivery of possession, is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 1st August 1914, affirming an order of the Munsif, Mymensingh, dated the 23rd May 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Heramba Charan Guha, for the Appellant.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether the application for execution of the decree is barred by limitation. The decree-holder applied for delivery of possession of certain properties and in that proceeding the judgment-debtor raised an objection to the standard of measurement. The Court found it necessary to take evidence in the matter, and thereupon the decree-holder applied for summons upon his witnesses on 11th February 1911. The question is whether the application for summoning witnesses may be treated as a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act, and whether the period of limitation is to run from that date. As that application was not a positive act done by the decree-holder in furtherance of his application for execution, it was not a step-in-aid of execution, and the present application made within three years from that date is time-barred. The period of limitation cannot be taken to run from the date of applying for summoning witnesses with a view to meet the objection of the judgment-debtor.

Opposing any objection of the judgment-debtor is not a step-in-aid of execution. See Troylokya Nath Bose v. Jyoti Prokash Nandi (1), Umesh Chunder Dutta v. Soonder Narain Deo (2), Shib Lal v. Radha Kishen (3).

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondent.—The cases referred to in support of the appellant's case are distinguishable and do not apply to the facts of the present case. In none of these cases was the decree-holder doing any act in furtherance of his application for execution, as has been done in the present case. In this case, the decree-holder applied for summoning witnesses to prove the standard of measurement which was a necessary step for obtaining delivery of possession in execution of the decree. This application, therefore, was a step taken by him for the execution of his decree. Of course, merely opposing an objection may not give a fresh start of limitation, but where any positive act is done in furtherance of the application for execution, a fresh period of limitation runs from the date of that Act; and as in the present case, the decree-holder applied for summons for the purpose of getting the relief prayed for by his application in the execution case, this application ought to be taken as a step-in aid of execution of his decree.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the application for execution of the decree, out of which this appeal arises, is barred by limitation.

It appears that the appellant obtained a decree for possession of certain property and possession was delivered to him on the 28th January 1911. The judgment-debtor raised objections to the delivery of possession by the Commissioner, and the Court found it necessary to determine the standard of measurement and, for that purpose, to take evidence in the matter. The decree-holder applied for summons upon his witnesses who were examined. The Court, after taking evidence on both sides, directed fresh delivery of possession by another Commissioner and ordered the decree-holder to deposit costs, which not having been paid, the execution case was

(1) 30 C. 761; 8 C. W. N. 251.

(2) 16 C. 747; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 495.

(3) 7 A. 898; A. W. N. (1885) 257; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 989.

MOTI LAL v. RAM NARAIN.

dismissed on the 30th January 1914 for default.

The question is whether the application made by the decree-holder on the 11th February 1911 for summoning witnesses was a step-in-aid of execution under Article 182, clause 5, of the Limitation Act.

It is true, as contended by the appellant, that a step-in-aid of execution must be a positive step taken by the decree-holder on his own account in furtherance of his own application, and not merely in opposition to any objection taken by the judgment-debtor. But, in the present case, although possession had been delivered to the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor filed a petition of objection to the delivery of possession; and the application for execution was pending and had not been disposed of.

Upon the objection of the judgment-debtor, the Court found it necessary to ascertain the standard of measurement, without the determination of which possession could not be delivered. Under these circumstances, it became necessary to adduce evidence on the point.

The application to the Court for summoning witnesses, therefore, was an act in furtherance of the application for execution which was still pending and was, therefore, a step-in-aid of execution.

The cases relied upon on behalf of the respondent were of a different nature. In the case of Trolokya Nath Bose v. Jyoti Prokash Nandi (1) it was held that the decree-holders' opposition to an application of the judgment-debtor to sell his properties in an order different from that in which they had already been directed to be sold, was not an application to take some step-in-aid of execution. It was only asking the Court to refrain from taking the course which had already been taken and not asking the Court to take some positive step. In Umesh Chunder Dutta v. Soonder Narain Deo (2) the appearance of the decree-holder by his Pleader to oppose an application made by the judgment-debtor to set aside a sale in execution of a decree was held not to be an application to take a step-in-aid of execution. In Shib Lal v. Radha Kishen (3) the Court held that resisting or offering objections to an attempt on the part of the judgment-debtor to set off the amount of the decree against the amount due to himself is not taking some step-in-aid of execution. On the other hand, in the unreported case (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 373 of 1894, decided on the 7th August 1895) it was held that where a decree-holder opposing an application to set aside a sale held at his instance puts in a list of witnesses and asks the Court to summon and examine the witnesses, he takes a step-in-aid of execution and is entitled to have a fresh period of three years for another application for the execution of his decree.

In the present case, as already stated, there was a substantive application by the decree-holder which was pending and his application for summoning witnesses was in furtherance of the execution of the decree, namely, for determining the standard of measurement without which he could not, in the opinion of the Court, obtain execution of the decree by delivery of possession.

We think, therefore, that the application was a step-in-aid of execution and the present application for execution, having been made within three years of the date on which such a step was taken, is not barred.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 201 of 1916.

May 28, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice Rafique.

MOTI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

RAM NARAIN—DEFENDANT

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Preliminary decree—Death of defendant before final decree—Application for substitution—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 177.

A preliminary decree does not put an end to a suit; it must be continued up to the stage of the final decree. [p. 1007, col 1.]

Where after the passing of a preliminary decree in a suit the defendant died, and an application to bring his representatives on the record was made more than six months after his death:

Held, that the application was barred by time. [p. 1007, col. 1.]

Jamnadas Chhabildas v. Sorabji Kharsedji, 16 B. 27; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 495, relied upon.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Agra.

SATAGOPA BHATTAR v. VENKU NAYUDU.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this application, may be reduced to this. The present applicant obtained a preliminary decree in a partnership case against one Pirbhu Dayal and others. Pirbhu Dyal died after the preliminary decree had been passed. Some two years after his death, the plaintiff applied to have the name of his heir brought upon the record and asked the Court to proceed with the suit. The heir objected on the ground that the application was barred by limitation as it ought to have been made within the period of six months from the date of the death. The Court of first instance held that it was a case to which Order XXII, rule 10, applied and granted the application as having been made within three years of his death. The defendants appealed. The Court below has held that Order XXII, rule 4, applied and that the application is barred by time. The plaintiff comes here in revision. The first plea taken before us is that if Order XXII, rule 4, applied an appeal lay to the Court below. As a matter of fact the applicant went into Court urging that Order XXII, rule 10, applied and the Court of first instance agreed with him and passed an order under that rule, and an appeal did lie from such an order. It is again argued before us as a second point that Order XXII, rule 10, applies to suits like the present and not Order XXII, rule 4. It is quite clear that rule 10 applies to all other cases which are not dealt with or covered by rules 1 to 9 in Order XXII. It is urged that a preliminary decree has been passed in this case and, therefore, rule 4 cannot apply. With this we cannot agree. In our opinion the suit was still pending. A preliminary decree does not put an end to the suit. It must be continued up to the stage of the final decree. That being so, it is clear that rule 4 covers the present case. If authority be deemed necessary for our decision we would point to the case of Jamnadas Chhabildas v. Sorabji Kharsedji (1), which is a clear authority in point.

(1) 16 B. 27; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 495.

Our attention was called to the case of Chunni Lal v. Abdul Ali Khan (2). This, however, is by no means in favour of the present applicant. That was a mortgage suit to which sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 applied. There it was held that a decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was only a decree nisi and not a final decree, and that the suit in which such a decree is passed does not terminate until an order absolute is made under section 89. Whether the law laid down there was correct or incorrect, it is clear that the law as it now stands, since the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force, is in accordance with that decision. The suit is clearly still pending. Rule 4 of Order XXII clearly does apply. The Court of first instance was wrong in applying rule 10, and we, therefore, disallow the present application with costs.

Application dismissed.

(2) 23 A. 331.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, MADRAS.

REVENUE REVISION PETITION NO. 3 OF 1917.

July 12, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Aziz-ud-Din, Ag. 4th Member.

SATAGOPA BHATTAR, SON OF VENKATA KRISHNA NAMBIAL OF THIRUNIUGUR—PETITIONER

versus

VENKU NAYUDU, HONORARY MANAGER, THIRUMUGUR DEVASTANAM, AND ANOTHER—COUNTER-PETITIONER.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 3 (5), 205—Board of Revenue, revisional powers of, extent of—Order refusing to recognise petitioner as landholder—Revision, whether lies.

The revisional powers vested in the Board of Revenue by section 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act are subject to considerable limitations. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

No revision lies to the Board of Revenue under section 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act against an order refusing to recognise the petitioner as a landholder under section 3 (5) of the Act. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Melur, D. Dis. No. 407 Rev., dated 4th February 1917.

RAMA NAND V. EMPEROR.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar Avargal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Chenchayya, for the 1st Counter-Petitioner.

ORDER.—This is a revision petition against the order of the Deputy Collector of Melur, refusing to recognise the petitioner, Sadagopa Bhattar, as a landholder under section 3 (5) of Act I of 1908.

The point requiring adjudication at the outset is, whether a revision petition lies to the Board of Revenue against the order. Section 3 (5) lays down that "where there is a dispute between two or more persons as to which of them is the landholder for all or any of the purposes of this Act (I of 1908) or between two or more joint landholders, as to which of them is entitled to proceed and be dealt with as such landholder, the person who shall be deemed to be the landholder for such purposes shall be the person whom the Collector, subject to any decree or order of a competent Civil Court, may recognize or nominate as such landholder in accordance with the rules to be framed by the Local Government on this behalf." Thus, it is clear that the Deputy Collector's order can only be revised by a competent Civil Court and by no other authority.

The revisional powers vested in the Board of Revenue by section 205 of the Act are subject to considerable limitations and do not obviously govern cases of the kind under consideration. The revision petition is dismissed.

Petitioner should bear his own and the counter-petitioner's costs.

Petition dismissed.

V. R. P.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL PETITION NO. 111 OF 1916.

January 12, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway.

RAMA NAND AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR, THROUGH TEJA SINGH—

COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 323—Death of complainant—Right of prosecution, survival of.

A prosecution under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code is a personal action and the right to carry on a prosecution under that section does not survive to the legal representatives of a deceased complainant.

Ishar Das v. Emperor, 10 P. R. 1908 Cr.; 8 P. W. R. 1908 Cr.; 7 Cr. L. J. 290; 112 P. L. R. 1908, Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta, 31 C. 993; 8 C. W. N. 745, relied upon.

Petition, under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for transfer of the case pending in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, 3rd Class, Bhiwani, District Hissar, to some other competent Court.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—This is an application for transfer of the case from the Court of Sardar Bahadur Captain Umda Singh, Honorary Magistrate, Bhiwani. It is not necessary for me, however, to go into the various grounds set forth in the application, which Mr. Kirkpatrick contended were amply sufficient for the grant of this application, as it appears that the complainant in the case is dead. The case was one under section 328, Indian Penal Code, which is a compoundable offence. It was urged before me that on the death of the complainant the case came to an end, and as authority for this proposition I have been referred to Ishar Das v. Emperor (1) and Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (2). These two decisions refer to cases of defamation, but, in my opinion, the principle therein enunciated applies equally to an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code. Just as a prosecution for defamation is essentially a personal action, so, in my opinion, is a prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code. This being the case, it follows that the right to carry on a prosecution under this section does not survive to the legal representatives of the deceased, see section 89 of Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). In my opinion, therefore, the Magistrate ought to have dismissed the case on the death of the complainant, and I accordingly treat this application as a revision and direct the dismissal of the case.

Petition accepted.

(1) 10 P. R. 1908 Cr.; 8 P. W. R. 1908 Cr. 7 Cr. L. J. 290; 112 P. L. R. 1908.

(2) 31 C. 993; 8 C. W. N. 745.

GENERAL INDEX

VOLUME XL—1917.

— :o:O:o: —

ACCOUNTS, suit for—Acknowledgment, suit on basis of, whether maintainable.

A suit for a sum of money due upon accounts, stated between the parties and for money lent, can lie on the basis of a mere acknowledgment. A KALLU v BHAGIRATH LAL 58 —, suit for, against administrator—Limitation.

The limitation for a suit for accounts against the administrator of an estate runs from the date when the plaintiff is entitled to put an end to his administration, i.e., on attaining majority and not from the date on which he does in fact put an end to it. PAT JANARDHAN PRASAD v. JANKIBATI THAKURAIN 860

ACCRETION, principle of, relating to Indian rivers—Lanks, formation of—Title—Derelict and alluvial lands—Bengal Regulation II of 1825 806

ACQUITTAL, petition against—Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Jurisdiction 316

ACTS—GENERAL.

ACT 1856—XV. See HINDU WIDOWS' RE-MARRIAGE ACT.

— 1860—XLV. See PENAL CODE.

— 1863—XX. See RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS ACT.

— 1870—VII. See COURT FEES ACT.

— 1871—VIII. See REGISTRATION ACT.

— 1872—I. See EVIDENCE ACT.

— 1872—IX. See CONTRACT ACT.

— 1874—XIV. See SCHEDULED DISTRICTS ACT.

— 1875—IX. See MAJORITY ACT.

— 1877—I. See SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT.

— 1877—XV. See LIMITATION ACT.

— 1881—V. See PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT.

— 1881—XXVI. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT.

— 1882—II. See TRUSTS ACT.

— 1882—IV. See TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT.

— 1882—XIV. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE.

— 1882—XV. See PRESIDENCY SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT.

— 1887—IX. See PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT.

— 1889—VII. See SUCCESSION CERTIFICATE ACT.

— 1890—VIII. See GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT.

— 1890—IX. See RAILWAYS ACT.

— 1893—IV. See PARTITION ACT.

— 1894—I. See LAND ACQUISITION ACT.

— 1895—XV. See CROWN GRANTS ACT.

— 1898—V. See CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.

ACTS—GENERAL—concl'd.

ACT 1899—II. See STAMP ACT.

— 1899—IX. See ARBITRATION ACT.

— 1907—III. See PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT.

— 1908—V. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE.

— 1908—IX. See LIMITATION ACT.

— 1908—XVI. See REGISTRATION ACT.

— 1909—III. See PRESIDENCY TOWNS INSOLVENCY ACT.

— 1913—VII. See COMPANIES ACT.

ACTS—(LOCAL)—BENGAL.

ACT 1859—XI. See BENGAL LAND REVENUE SALES ACT.

— 1870—VI. See BENGAL VILLAGE CHAUKIDARI ACT.

— 1875—V. See BENGAL SURVEY ACT.

— 1884—III. See BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT.

— 1885—VIII. See BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

— 1899—III. See CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL ACT.

— 1907—II. See EASTERN BENGAL AND ASSAM DISORDERLY HOUSES ACT.

— 1908—VI. See CHOTA NAGPUR TENANCY ACT.

— 1909—V. See BENGAL EXCISE ACT.

ACTS—(LOCAL)—BOMBAY.

ACT 1881—XXI. See BROACH AND KAIRA INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.

— 1887—IV. See BOMBAY PREVENTION OF GAMBLING ACT.

— 1888—III. See BOMBAY CITY MUNICIPAL ACT.

— 1890—II. See BOMBAY SALT ACT.

— 1890—IV. See BOMBAY DISTRICT POLICE ACT.

ACTS—(LOCAL)—MADRAS.

ACT 1865—VIII. See MADRAS RENT RECOVERY ACT.

— 1889—III. See MADRAS TOWN NUISANCES ACT.

— 1900—I. See MALABAR COMPENSATION FOR TENANTS' IMPROVEMENTS ACT.

— 1902—I. See MADRAS COURT OF WARDS ACT.

— 1903—I. See MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT.

ACTS—(LOCAL)—PUNJAB.

ACT 1887—XVI. See PUNJAB TENANCY ACT.

— 1900—I. See PUNJAB LIMITATION (ANCESTRAL LAND ALIENATION) ACT.

— 1905—II. See PUNJAB PRE-EMPTION ACT.

— 1914—III. See PUNJAB COURTS ACT.

ACTS—(LOCAL)—U. P.

- ACT 1869—I. See OUDH ESTATES ACT.
 — 1886—XXII. See OUDH RENT ACT.
 — 1900—I. See U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT.
 — 1901—III. See U. P. LAND REVENUE ACT.
 — 1916—II. See U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT.

ORDINANCES.

- ORD. 1914—VI. See COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE WITH ENEMIES ORDINANCE.

REGULATIONS.

- REG. 1793—VIII. See BENGAL DECENNIAL SETTLEMENT REGULATION.
 — 1819—VIII. See PUTNI REGULATION.
 — 1819—VIII. See REGULATION.
 — 1872—III. See SONTHAL PERGANNAS REGULATION.

STATUTES.

- ACT 1915—5 & 6 GEO. V, C. 61. See GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT.

ADVERSE POSSESSION against lessee, when adverse against lessor.

The possession of a trespasser of land let out on lease does not become adverse as against the lessor until the termination of the lease. C HAJRA SARDARA v. KUNJA BEHARI NAG, 25 C. L. J. 635; 21 C. W. N. 1001

271

—, whether question of law—Burden of proof.

A question of adverse possession may be a question of law where the facts are not in dispute and where the conclusion depends upon inferences to be drawn from admitted facts. A CHAMPA LAL v. MANGAL CHAND —Trespassers in succession—Title to properties, by whom acquired.

420

Where there are successive independent trespassers who have been continuously in possession for the statutory period, the first trespasser gets the title and not the last who is in possession at the time when the title of the real owner is extinguished. M SUBBAYYA PANDARAM v. MAHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARACAYAR, 21 M. L. T. 62; 5 L. W. 690; 32 M. L. J. 85

50

ALIENATION—Gift—Suit for declaration of invalidity of gift—Non-ancestral property

237

ALLUVION—Accretion, principle of, relating to Indian rivers—Lankas, formation of—Title—Derelict and alluvial lands—Bengal Regulation II of 1825.

Land, to be an accretion, must, according to the Common Law, be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees. By 'imperceptible' is meant imperceptible in its progress, i.e., step by step as the accretion is being formed and not imperceptible in the result, i.e., after a long lapse of time. It is the manner of the formation, not the result, which decides whether the addition is an accretion or not. If the addition was by gradual and insensible degrees, it is an accretion, while if a considerable increase takes place at one time, it is not an accretion. The increase must be imperceptible to an ordinary person as the addition is being formed.

ALLUVION—concl'd.

Natural silting up, if gradual and imperceptible, will give the land to the adjoining owner.

A perceptible addition made in the course of a single year during the annual rise of a river is a sudden increase and is not an accretion to the adjoining riparian land.

There is no reason for giving the mud and sand deposited in large quantities in the bed of a river, which belongs to the Crown in trust for the public, to the adjoining owner simply because the deposit is also adherent to the adjoining land, so long as such deposits are distinguishable from the adjoining land. The principle of identity is applicable only to derelict lands exposed by the sudden recession of the sea or change of a river's course.

In adopting the law as to alluvion in India the Courts should be guided by local physical conditions. The principle laid down in Bengal Regulation II of 1825 affords the best practical guide in applying the law of accretion to the case of large Indian rivers. Under that Regulation, all that is necessary is that the accretion should be by gradual alluvial process; it need not be imperceptible, and it need not be slow.

The fact that original boundary is known or ascertainable does not render the law of accretion inapplicable. M SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJAH OF VIZAYANAGARAM, 22 M. L. T. 57

896

ALLUVION AND DILUVION—Re-formation in situ—Limitation—Burden of proof.

A chur, which was found to be a re-formation in situ of plaintiff's land, was occupied for some years by Government. It was then claimed by defendants as their property, and Government made over possession to them. On plaintiff's suing to recover possession, defendants pleaded limitation and to make out their plea claimed to tack on to their own occupation the period of Government's possession:

Held, that the defendants did not derive their liability to be sued "from or through" the Revenue Authorities within the meaning of section 2 (4) of the Indian Limitation Act and that, therefore, their plea must fail. P C BASANTA KUMAR ROY v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 1 P. L. W. 593; 32 M. L. J. 505; 21 C. W. N. 642; 15 A. L. J. 398; 25 C. L. J. 487; 19 Bom. L. R. 489; (1917) M. W. N. 482; 6 L. W. 117; 22 M. L. T. 30

337

APPEAL (CIVIL)—Admissibility of document admitted objection, whether can be questioned—Pleadings.

Documentary evidence which is not altogether irrelevant and which has been admitted without objection, cannot be objected to in appeal on the ground that it is not admissible for the purposes for which it has been used. C PRASANNA DEB RAIKAT v. MOHANANDA DAS

553

Court-fees on memorandum of appeal—Objection.

Where on an objection being taken as to the insufficiency of Court fee on a memorandum of appeal it appeared that the Court-fee was exactly the same as that on the plaint and that the Trial Judge had on an objection by the defendant framed an issue on the point and decided it in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant had accepted the decision and stamped his own appeal in the lower Appellate Court accordingly:

APPEAL (CIVIL)—concl'd.

Held, that under the circumstances the objection could not be entertained. P CHUNNU LAL v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., DELHI, 103 P. W. R. 197 904 ———— decided on new case not made out in pleadings, re-hearing of—Remand.

Where an Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit affirming the decision of the primary Court on a case which was neither set up by the plaintiff nor by the defendant and was absolutely inconsistent with the defendant's case:

Held, that the judgment of the Appellate Court could not stand and that the case should be remanded to the Appellate Court for a re-hearing of the appeal. C JNANENDRA MOHAN SEN v. HARI RAM RABHA 467

——— Execution—Decision on preliminary point 517

——— Finding on particular point against party in whose favour decree is made—Res judicata.

Where it is necessary to decide a particular point between the parties to the suit and the Court comes to a finding upon that point, the finding operates as res judicata between them and the aggrieved party can prefer an appeal against that finding, although the decree is in his favour. PAT BAGHUNATH KURMI v. DEO NARAIN RAI 771

——— Pleadings, amendment of, in appeal.

When a plaintiff desires to amend his plaint so as to convert his declaratory suit into a suit for recovery of possession and for an injunction at a time when the case is being decided on appeal, he ought not to be permitted to do so if substantial injustice will not be done by directing him to bring a fresh suit, or if the change sought to be made in the plaint is of an unprecedented description. PAT SATYA NARAYAN CHAKRAVARTY v. DWARKA NATH SADHU, 2 P. L. J. 379; 1 P. L. W. 738 174 ——— Point going to root of suit not argued, effect of.

Where in an appeal which comes before an Appellate Court and is heard upon the merits a point which goes to the root of the suit is not argued it must be taken to be abandoned. A HANSRAJ v. BIJAI RAM SINGH 621

——— when can be treated as revision—Technical objections.

The High Court can, to meet substantial justice, treat an appeal presented to it as a revision petition where technical objections as to adequacy of Court-fees, etc., prevent its entertaining the appeal. M SUBBA PILLAI v. RANGASAMI, (197) M. W. N. 306 845

——— Withdrawal of suit—Res judicata 853

——— (CRIMINAL)—Judgment, contents of—Possession, determination of factum of—Court, duty of 752

——— (SECOND)—Evidence of usage, decision on—High Court, duty of.

Where the judgment of a Court of Appeal on a question of custom or usage is reversed by the High Court in second appeal on a preliminary point, it should not take on itself to examine the evidence as to usage as if it were hearing a first appeal, but should remand the case for disposal by the lower Appellate Court. M PANKAYAMMAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 5 L. W. 346; 32 M. L. J. 237; 21 M. L. T. 411 516 ——— Finding of fact—Burden of proof, wrong view of allocation of.

APPEAL (SECOND)—concl'd.

A wrong view of the allocation of the burden of proof is a good ground for setting aside a finding of fact in second appeal. P NIAZ ALI KHAN v. SHER, 37 P. W. R. 1917 176

——— Finding of fact, erroneous—High Court, power of interference of 772 ——— Findings on issues referred to lower Appellate Court—High Court, interference by Findings on issues referred to a lower Appellate Court in second appeal are just as much findings of fact as the findings in the original suit and cannot be disturbed by the High Court in second appeal. A NEHAL SINGH v. SEWA RAM 128 ——— Person joined in appeal without consent—Issue, objection to, whether can be taken.

A person who is joined in an appeal without his authority cannot be regarded as an appellant.

No objection to the frame of an issue can be entertained for the first time in second appeal, where the issue is wide enough to cover all the grounds of attack and defence and all the available evidence has been produced before the Court. P NANDA v. JAI CHAND, 35 P. W. R. 1917 184 ——— Onus, question of—Question of law and fact—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 41.

In a case where, in the absence of all evidence on an issue, a decision is arrived at on a wrong laying of onus, the question of onus would be a question of law and a second appeal would be competent.

It is otherwise, however, where the onus having been wrongly laid, the case is nevertheless decided on a weighing of evidence on both sides. P KAURA v. KALLU RAM, 34 P. W. R. 197 1003 ——— Question of law—Summary dismissal—Board's Circular, 8-II, r. 19.

An allegation that there is no evidence to support a specific finding of fact is a ground of law; and where such a ground is taken in second appeal, the Court is not justified in summarily dismissing the appeal under the Board's Circular 8-II, rule 19. UPBR GANGA BAKHSI SINGH v. HAR PRASAD, 4 O. L. J. 140 139 ——— Tenure, whether permanent—Finding of fact.

The decision of the question whether a certain jote (tenancy) is a tenure or a raiya holding is a finding of fact which is not open to question in second appeal.

The question whether a tenure is a permanent tenure is not merely one of fact if it depends, at any rate to a large extent, on the construction of the kabuliyats executed from time to time by the tenant or his predecessors. C PRODYOT COOMAR TAGORE v. KRISHNAMONI DASYA, 21 C. W. N. 809. 513 ——— Undue influence—Finding of fact.

The finding of a lower Appellate Court that one of the parties to a suit for cancellation of a document executed it under undue influence is a finding on the merits and is, therefore, not open to question in second appeal, where there is some evidence, however, untrustworthy, to show that pressure was put upon that party and that the other party in whose favour the document was executed obtained an unfair advantage. C PROBHA CHANDRA SHOME v. SHASHADHAR KUMAR GHOSE 215

APPEAL, (SECOND)—concl'd.

— Vague and unsatisfactory findings 496
APPELLATE COURT, Criminal—Judgment, contents of 689

APPELLATE INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION OF HIGH COURT—Inherent power to award costs.

The High Court in its Appellate Insolvency Jurisdiction has ample inherent power to make an order in regard to the costs of the proceedings for adjudication in insolvency, where it is satisfied upon the facts of the case that the proceedings have been an abuse of the process of the Court. C KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJI v. SARAT KUMARI DEBI, 21 C. W. N. 826; 26 C. L. J. 44 999

ARBITRATION—Arbitrators, absence of some, from meetings, effect of—Award, validity of.

Inasmuch as the parties to a submission to arbitration have the right to the presence and effect of the arguments, experience and judgment of each arbitrator at every stage of the proceedings, so that by conference they may mutually assist each other in arriving at a just conclusion, it is essential that there should be a unanimous participation by the arbitrators in consulting and deliberating upon the award to be made. The operation of this rule is in no way affected by the fact that authority is conferred upon the arbitrators to make a majority award: even where less than the whole number of arbitrators may make a valid award, they cannot do so without consulting the other arbitrators. C ABU HAMID ZAHIR ALA v. GULAM SARWAR, 25 C. L. J. 396 422 ARBITRATION ACT IX OF 1899), S. 19—'Step in the proceedings', what amounts to.

Any application whatsoever to the Court, even though it be merely an application for time, is a 'step in the proceedings', within the meaning of section 19 of the Arbitration Act, irrespective of the intention with which the application is made.

Even a mere acquiescence in a proceeding initiated by the other party and in an order made on his separate application amounts to a 'step in the proceedings'. S FLEMING SHAW AND CO. v. HAJI YUSUF ELLIAS, 10 S. L. R. 190 81

BAILMENT—Pledgor and pledgee, rights of—Pledge by person in possession of goods having limited authority—Principal, knowledge of 148

BENAMIDAR, whether can sue for possession

A benamidar who has no interest of his own in the land in dispute cannot maintain a suit for possession on the basis of the sale-deed in his favour. PAT REGAN KUER v. JHARI MAHTON 610

BENGAL DECENNIAL SETTLEMENT REGULATION (VIII OF 1793), Ss. 36 to 41—Dahal tenure—Chowkidari chakera lands, resumption of—Permanent Settlement—Zemindars, rights of 981

BENGAL EXCISE ACT (V OF 1909), Ss. 46, 90—Act VII B. C. of 1914, s. 2, cl. 14—Medicinal preparation containing alcohol, manufacture and sale of—Offence.

A preparation containing alcohol is not outside the provisions of the Bengal Excise Act as amended by Bengal Act VII of 1914, simply because it is a medicinal preparation or may be used for medicinal purposes.

BENGAL EXCISE ACT—concl'd.

The manufacture and sale of Mrita Sanjivani Sudha prepared in accordance with the "Ayurvedic" Pharmacopœia and used for medicinal purposes only otherwise than in conformity with the provisions of the Excise Act is an offence, unless it is exempted by notification under the provisions of section 90 of the Act. C GANESH CHANDRA SIKDAR v. EMPEROR, 18 CR. L. J. 740; 26 C. L. J. 342 740

— S. 90

740

BENGAL LAND REVENUE SALES ACT (XI OF 1859), Ss. 6, 33—Sale notification, defective, construction of Revenue sale, annulment of Limitation "Ijmal," meaning of—Collector, duty of—Sale certificate, value of.

Per Curiam (Chapman, J., dissenting).—Where a notification under section 6 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act is not sufficient in itself to tell intending purchasers what they are invited to bid for, it renders the sale void.

Case-law discussed

Whenever a residuary share is advertised for sale under section 6 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act the mouzas comprising that share must be correctly described by the Collector.

Per Chapman, J.—Where a bona fide attempt has been made to describe the share or shares to be sold in the notification under section 6 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, the sale is not void but the mistakes should be treated as irregularities which may form the basis of a suit within the limitations of section 33 of the Act.

Where a sale notification contains defects, the Collector has no jurisdiction to amend anything in the original notification under section 6 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act.

A sale-certificate is not a certificate of title in the case of a purchaser under a sale under Act XI of 1859 and the statements contained therein are not conclusive to show what was offered to and purchased by the auction-purchaser.

Under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act the Collector is not required to specify the mauzas when selling an entire estate or a separate account, but he is required so to do when selling the residuary share.

The Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act is a complete Code in itself and is quite independent of the general law of limitation

Therefore, when a sale is not one under the provisions of the Revenue Sales Act, a suit to set aside the sale is not affected by the provisions which require an appeal to the Commissioner but falls under Article 142 of the Limitation Act. PAT KRISHNA DAYAL GIR v. ABDUL GAFFUR, 2 P. L. J. 492; 3 P. L. W. 229 13

— S. 33, scope of.

Section 33 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act provides that no sale shall be annulled by a Court except on the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, and that no sale shall be annulled upon such a ground unless the ground relied upon has been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner under section 25 of the Act. PAT KRISHNA DAYAL GIR v. ABDUL GAFFUR, 2 P. L. J. 492; 3 P. L. W. 229 13

BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT (III B. C. OF 1884), S. 224—"Cesspool", what is—Cisterns for collection of rice water, and rainwater, whether "cesspools"—"Drain," meaning of.

The common meaning of the word "cesspool" is a pit into which a drain discharges its contents. The word "drain" means not merely a water channel but a channel used for the flow of offensive matter. Before a channel can be called a drain within the terms of the Municipal Act, it must be shown that offensive matter is carried by it and before a pit at the end of such a channel can be called a "cesspool" it must be shown that offensive matter is discharged into it.

Where a gentleman constructed two masonry reservoirs, $\frac{1}{2}$ feet by $2\frac{3}{4}$ feet, near his house (without the permission of the Municipality within which it was situate), one to collect surplus rainwater from the roof of his house and the other to receive rice water from his kitchen, and no offensive matter was allowed or was intended to be carried into these two reservoirs:

Held, that the cisterns were not cesspools and as such were not liable to be removed or closed under section 221, Bengal Municipal Act, and that unless it was definitely proved that they were used for collection of obnoxious matter no action under the section could be taken.

Rice water is in itself not an offensive thing, although if allowed to stagnate it becomes offensive in time. PAT KASI PATY MUKHERJEE v. CHAIRMAN OF THE PURI MUNICIPALITY, 1 P. L. W. 774 552

BENGAL SURVEY ACT (V OF 1875), S. 62, whether applies to suit for possession.

Section 62 of the Bengal Survey Act has no application to a suit where the plaintiff being out of possession claims possession as owner of land from which he has been dispossessed by reason of Survey and Settlement proceedings. PAT NAWAL KISHORE NATH SAHI DEO v. JALESHWAR DAYAL SINGH 588

BENGAL TENANCY ACT (VIII B. C. OF 1885), S. 4—Raiyats, kinds of.

Obiter dictum—The Bengal Tenancy Act does not contemplate a raiya who does not come under the classes enumerated in section 4 of the Act. PAT UDAI CHAND v. JANG BAHADUR SINGH, 2 P. L. J. 353; 2 P. L. W. 118 500

— S. 29—Rent reserved with temporary remission, whether recoverable in full—Penalty.

Where the original rent of an occupancy holding was Rs. 18 a year, but, for some unexplained reason, in a kabuliyat taken from the ryot, the rent was stated to be Rs. 19-14-0, out of which, for the term of the kabuliyat, a remission was allowed and the actual rent payable for the term was stated to be Rs. 12 only, and it was further provided that if the tenant failed to take a fresh settlement at an enhanced rent on the expiry of the term of the kabuliyat he would be liable to pay the full rent reserved in the kabuliyat:

Held, that the true rent of the holding, when the kabuliyat was executed, being Rs. 12, the provision as to the payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 19-14-0 offended against or was a device to evade the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and was, therefore, inoperative.

BENGAL TENANCY ACT—contd.

Per Fletcher, J.—That the provision as to the enhanced rent was a penal one, held in terrorem over the head of the tenant to make him come to the landlord and enter into a new settlement after the expiry of the kabuliyat, and was merely an attempt to evade the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C SATIS CHUNDRA MUST FI v. AMANULLA BEPARI 113

— Ss. 30, 52—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Undivided share in parcel of land, whether holding—'Parcel of land,' meaning of.

An undivided share in a parcel or parcels of land is not a holding within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, therefore, no suit for enhancement of rent in respect of such share would lie either under section 30 or section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The word 'parcel' in the definition of the word 'holding' cannot be said to mean an undivided share. PAT HARNANDAN RAI v. KESHO PRASAD SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 798; 2 P. L. J. 553 585

S. 30, SUB-SEC. (b)—Suit for enhancement of rent on ground of rise in prices of staple food crops—Evidence—Landlord, whether bound to prove price of crops at inception of tenancy.

In a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent, it is not incumbent upon the landlord, in order to enable him to get a decree for increased rent under the provisions of section 30, sub-section (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to prove by positive evidence what was the value of the staple food crops at the date of the inception of the tenancy in order to enable the Court to compare that value with the current list of prices kept by the Government under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C BHU-DHAR CHANDRA ROY CHOUDHURY v. NANDA LAL ROY 682

— S. 50—Presumption—Slight variation of rent.

A slight variation in the rents paid in the preceding years, unless explained as having been due to an increase of area or any other cause than that of enhancement of rent, is sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C PRASANNA DEB RAIKAT v. MOHANANDA DAS 553

— S. 52, applicability of—Lease—Agreement not to vary rent until actual measurement 494

— Ss. 52, 30—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Undivided share in parcel of land, whether holding—'Parcel of land,' meaning of 585

— S. 68—Landlord and tenant—Interest on arrears of rent disallowed.

E In decreeing a suit for arrears of rent a Court is entitled under section 68 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to disallow interest to the landlord, plaintiff, if it finds that a proper tender had been made by the tenant defendant of the rents due before proceedings were instituted for their realisation. C BHUPENDRA KUMAR SARKAR v. KISSORI DAS 614

— S. 72 655

— S. 86—Incumbrance, meaning of 544

— S. 103B—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption—Conflict with established law.

An entry in the Record of Rights cannot have the effect of overruling well-settled principles of law,

BENGAL TENANCY ACT—contd.

Where such entry conflicts with the established law, the established law must prevail over the entry and the presumption attaching to the entry must be deemed to have been rebutted. PAT RAGHUBIR MISSEER v. BHAJAN SINGH, 2 P. L. W. 27 987

S. 111A, suit under—Consequential relief.

Where in a suit under section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff tenant asks not only for a declaration of the occupancy right of which he claims he is in possession, but also asks for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights as to his status as tenure-holders is a nullity, the plaint comes within section 7, sub-section 4, clause (c), of the Court Fees Act, inasmuch as a consequential relief is asked therein.

The proviso to section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be strictly applied. C MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 41 C 352; 21 C W. N. 834 96

S. 116—Mortgage—Construction of deed—Mortgagor left in possession of part of mortgaged property, position of—Occupancy rights, acquisition of.

Unless there are the strongest reasons for doing so, a Court ought not to give a construction to an alleged attornment clause in a mortgage-deed which will have the effect of creating rights of tenancy in derogation of the mortgagee's rights.

In order to determine whether a clause in a mortgage deed, allowing the mortgagor to remain in possession of a portion of the mortgaged property on payment of a nominal rent, amounts to an attornment clause, what is to be looked at is the real intention of the parties, and the facts of each particular case must be taken into account in order to see what the intention of the parties was. If the intention was to create the relationship of landlord and tenant, then the rent law of the country will apply.

Even when the alleged attornment is created by a conveyance other than the mortgage-deed, it is open to the Court to hold that the mortgage and the lease constitute one transaction and that the mortgagee is entitled to count the alleged rent as a charge upon the mortgaged property qua principal and interest.

Out of 200 bighas of zerai land mortgaged by the defendants to the plaintiff in 1896, an area of 50 bighas was left in possession of the former who were liable to pay a nominal rent of 8 annas per bigha for use and occupation. In 1902, a further area of 4 bighas was by a kabuliyat let out to the defendants at a rental of Rs. 11. Plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent and for khas possession in terms of the mortgage.

Held, (1) that the clause relating to the 50 bighas was not an attornment clause, but was merely an arrangement made by favour of the landlord by which the mortgagor was allowed to remain in possession in the capacity of something like a licensee, and that the land being zerai land, the protection afforded by section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the acquisition of occupancy right applied;

(2) that the kabuliyat in respect of the 4 bighas created the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that the defendants had acquired occupancy rights in the land as against the plaintiff.

BENGAL TENANCY ACT—contd.

The law does not preclude a mortgagor from securing the status of an occupancy raiyat under his mortgagee. PAT UDAI CHAND v. JANG BAHADUR SINGH, 2 P. L. J. 352; 2 P. L. W. 118 500

S. 167—Incumbrance, annulment of—"Date of sale," meaning of.

The words "date of sale" in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean the date when the sale is confirmed, and not the date when the property is actually sold to the purchaser. This is especially so where the sale took place when the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, under which the purchaser could acquire no interest until the sale certificate was issued, was in force. C NANDA LAL v. UMES CHANDRA DAS, 26 C. L. J. 328 996

Ss. 170 (3), 161—Transferee of portion of occupancy holding not transferable by custom, whether entitled to make deposit—Interest of transferee—Interest and encumbrance, difference between.

Per Curiam (Mullick, J, dissenting).—The transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom is not a person who has in the holding proclaimed for sale an interest which is "voidable on the sale" within the meaning of section 70 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, and is not, therefore, entitled to deposit the amount of the landlord's decree and costs under that section.

The interest of such a transferee is not an encumbrance as defined in section 161 of the Act.

Per Mullick, J—The purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom has an interest voidable on the sale, and is entitled to deposit the arrears under section 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. The interest of such a person is not an encumbrance within the meaning of section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act. The word "interest" in section 170 is a wider term than encumbrance and includes rights other than those falling within the narrow limits of section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act. PAT MAHADEO LAL v. LANGAT SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 504; (1917) Pat. 169; 2 P. L. J. 457 257

S. 174, order under—Appeal, whether lies—Dispute between parties to suit.

Where a decree-holder himself is the auction-purchaser an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application of the judgment-debtor under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act seeking to deposit the money due under the decree. PAT AKHOURI PREM NARAIN v. FAHIMUNNISSA, (1917) Pat. 244; 2 P. L. J. 625 662

Sch. III, Art. 3, applicability of 594

ART. 3, applicability of—Dispossession by landlord as such, whether necessary—Limitation.

In order that the special rule of limitation as comprised in Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act may apply, it is not necessary that the dispossession must be by the landlord as such.

A suit by a ryot to recover possession of a holding, from which he was dispossessed by the defendants with whom it was settled by the landlords after they had purchased it in execution of a decree, is governed by Article 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C SATIS CHANDRA BASU v. NITYA GOPAL HALDAR, 21 C. W. N. 978 419

BENGAL TENANCY ACT—concl'd.

— — — — — SCH. III, ART. 3, applicability of—Dispossession of tenant by landlord as auction-purchaser of jote—Suit to recover possession—Limitation.

Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to a suit by a tenant to recover possession of the holding from the landlord, whether the dispossession of the tenant was by the landlord in his capacity of landlord or that of an auction-purchaser of the jote. PAT GOWHAR ALI v. ENAYAT ALI, 2 P. L. W. 45 774 — — — — — ART. 3, applicability of—Possession, suit for, by tenant—Dispossession by landlord, not as such Limitation.

Per Chamier, C. J.—Article 3, Sch. III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, applies only to a suit by a raiyat or under-raiyat against his landlord, including one or more of several landlords. If it is shown that the plaintiff raiyat is in fact a tenant of the defendant who dispossessed him in respect of the land claimed in the suit, the Article will apply. The reason or excuse given or supposed to have been given by the landlord for dispossessing his tenant appears to have no bearing on the enactment.

Per Mullick, J.—Whether the plaintiff admits the defendant to be his landlord or not or the defendant admits that the plaintiff is his raiyat or not, if in fact the relationship of landlord and tenant is found to exist then Article 3, Schedule III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, will apply.

The policy of the Legislature since 1885 is to rigorously exclude all other Statutes of Limitation whenever it is possible to apply the special limitation provided by the Rent Acts.

Where a co-sharer landlord dispossessed a raiyat claiming the land as his zerait and in a suit for recovery of possession by the tenant brought more than two years after the date of dispossession it was found as a matter of fact that the land was really the kasht of the tenant:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III, Part I, Bengal Tenancy Act, even though when dispossessing the tenant the landlord did not purport to act as landlord of the holding. PAT KUNTI DAI v. JHARU LAL DAS, 2 P. L. W. 16; (1917) PAT. 247; 2 P. L. J. 567 907

BENGAL VILLAGE CHOWKIDARI ACT (VI B. C. OF 1870), Ss. 49, 50, 51.—Bengal Decennial Settlement Regulation (VIII of 1793), ss. 36 to 41—Patni tenure—Chowkidari chakran lands, resumption of—Permanent Settlement—Zemindar, rights of.

Chowkidari Chakran lands resumed by Government and transferred to the zemindar under Bengal Act VI of 1870 pass by virtue of such transfer to the holder of a patni lease of the villages within which such lands are situate.

The prima facie title of the zemindar to Chakran lands within his district is recognised by the Permanent Settlement. The zemindar's interest in such lands, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, passes under a patni grant.

BENGAL VILLAGE CHOWKIDARI ACT—concl'd

Not only does Bengal Act VI of 1870 recognise the existing title of the zemindar to the lands resumed, but the estate taken by the zemindar under the order of transfer is in confirmation and by way of continuance of his existing estate, and when the zemindar or those through whom he claims enter or have entered into contracts affecting his existing estate, the rights of third parties under such contracts are preserved. P C RANJIT SINGH v. KALI DAS DEBI, 21 C. W. N. 609; 32 M. L. J. 565; 15 A. L. J. 390; 25 C. L. J. 499; 19 Bom L. R. 462; 2 P. L. W. 1; (1917) M. W. N. 459; 6 L. W. 101 981

— — — — — S. 51—Chowkidari Chakran lands—Putnidar, liability of, to pay additional rent

Where there is nothing to suggest in the terms of a putni lease that in any event a larger or smaller rent is to be paid for the putni, the putnidars are not liable to pay any additional rent in respect of the chowkidari chakran lands resumed and transferred to the zemindar under section 51 of Act VI of 1870, which the putnidars have a right to hold as forming part of their putni. C NALINAKHYA BASU v. BIJOY CHAND MAHATAP 395

BOMBAY CITY MUNICIPAL ACT (BOM. ACT. III OF 1888), Ss. 461 (o), 418.—Bombay Municipal Bye-Laws, Ch. III, Bye-law 4, whether ultra vires—Measure, honest and current, but not verified, use of—Offence—Commissioner, duty of.

The fourth bye-law in Chapter III of the Bye-Laws framed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation, which prohibits the use of any measure which has not been duly verified by comparison with the standard measure, is beyond the powers vested in the Municipal Corporation under section 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, inasmuch as it purports to give the Municipal Corporation or the Commissioner far wider power than that conferred by section 418 of the Act.

Clause (o) of section 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act means no more than that the Corporation shall have power to pass bye-laws to prevent the practice of fraud by the use of measures which are false or defective with reference to the standard measures assumed to have been verified by the Commissioner as directed in section 418. But neither under section 418 nor under section 461 has the Corporation the power to say that in the private markets of the city no measure shall be brought into use unless it has already been verified by the Commissioner. Rather the provisions of the Act import that if the Commissioner has reason to suspect any particular measure which is current, his method of controlling it is to verify it as directed under section 418, and thereafter to secure that the measures of that denomination in use shall correspond with the verified measure.

There is nothing in section 418 or under section 461, clause (o), of the City of Bombay Municipal Act which would justify the Municipality in prohibiting the use of an honest measure in a private market, merely on the plea that if the use of that measure were prohibited, it might be easier for the Municipality to ensure that the measures actually in use should not be false or defective with reference to the verified and standard measures.

BOMBAY CITY MUNICIPAL ACT—concl'd.

The use of an honest measure of one description, cannot be said to facilitate the commission of fraud by the use of false or defective measures of a wholly different name and description. B JIVRAJ DHANJI, In re, 19 BOM. L. R. 358, 18 CR. L. J. 701 701

BOMBAY DISTRICT POLICE ACT (BOM. ACT IV OF 1890), S. 61 (b)—Vehicle, bicycle whether is—"Drive", meaning of.

A bicycle is a vehicle within the meaning of the word as used in clause (b) of section 61 of the Bombay District Police Act, 1890, and it is a vehicle "driven" by the man who rides it. B EMPEROR v. KIKABHAI RANCHHODAS, 19 BOM. L. R. 349; 18 CR. L. J. 641; 41 B. 464 289

BOMBAY PREVENTION OF GAMBLING ACT (BOM. ACT IV OF 1887), Ss. 8, 6 (c)—Forfeiture, articles liable to.

The second paragraph of section 8 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, 1887, refers back to clause (c) of section 6 and the articles liable to seizure and forfeiture are limited to articles of value reasonably suspected to have been used or intended to have been used for the purposes of gaming and found within the premises. B RASUL GULAB KADIA v. EMPEROR, 19 BOM. L. R. 352; 18 CR. L. J. 633 311

BOMBAY SALT ACT (II OF 1890), S. 11—License to manufacture salt—Licensee taking partners to share in profits, legality of.

Where a licensee under section 11 of the Bombay Salt Act, who is prohibited, by the terms of his license, from sub-letting the whole or a part of the privilege, admits some members of his family and others as partners in the business to share the profits, the partners, however, not having any part in the manufacture of salt, the arrangement does not infringe the provisions either of the license or of section 11 of the Act.

The admission of partners to share in the profits cannot be considered as a sub-letting or alienation of a part of the privilege, unless there has been a document directly transferring to the partners or attempting to transfer to the partners a part of the right to manufacture or vend. B CHAMPSEY DOSSA v. GORDHANDAS KESSOWJI, 19 BOM. L. R. 381 805

BOND, suit on—Interest, when to be granted as damages.

Where there is no stipulation in a bond for payment of interest after due date, interest can be allowed only up to the date of payment of the debt as damages for recurring breaches of the contract to repay for the period of six years prior to the date of suit. PAT GITA PRASAD SINGH v. RAGHO SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 777 809

BOUNDARY FENCE, ownership of—Trees growing on fence.

A boundary fence is owned by the adjoining proprietors to the centre of the fence, each owner being entitled to claim the land forming the fence to its centre and the trees growing thereon. PAT RAGHUBIR MISSEER v. BHADAN SINGH, 2 P. L. W. 27 987

BROACH AND KAIRA INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT (XXI OF 1881), S. 28—*Mortgage by talukdar, validity of—Mortgagee, right of, to recover mortgage money—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65, applicability of1002BUDDHIST LAW, Burmese—Gift.

Under the Buddhist Law a gift made during the donor's last illness with the effect of excluding his heirs would be invalid without delivery of possession. L B MAUNG BA MAUNG v. MAUNG PYU 854

BURDEN OF PROOF, question of, when evidence let in on both sides.

In cases where evidence has been let in by both parties to a suit, the best course is for the Court to weigh the evidence as a whole without throwing the burden of proof on either party. M PANKAJAMMAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 5 L. W. 346; 32 M. L. J. 237; 21 M. L. T. 411 516

CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL ACT (III B. C. OF 1899), S. 336, whether controls s. 91, Civil Procedure Code—Public highway, dedication of.

Section 336 of the Calcutta Municipal Act does not impose any limitation on section 91, Civil Procedure Code, so as to exclude from its scope cases in which a local authority, such as a Municipal Committee or a District Board, might be regarded as competent to safeguard the interests of the public against acts of public nuisance created by the obstruction of a public highway.

No formal act of adoption by any person or authority is required for the acceptance of a highway dedicated to the public use, such acceptance can be inferred from the public user of the way. C SURAJ MAL KHARAD v. AKSHOY KUMAR ROY, 2 C. W. N. 595 74

S. 561—Bye-laws framed under Act, Nos. 83, 85, interpretation of—Persons guilty of breach of bye-law, whether punishable separately

Per Curiam, (Teunon, J., dissenting.)—The breach of a bye-law of the Calcutta Corporation by several persons acting in concert is punishable under the Calcutta Municipal Act as a single offence, the individual offenders not being punishable separately.

The joint proprietors of a theatre are "a person" for the purposes of Bye-law No. 85 of the Calcutta Corporation, framed under the Calcutta Municipal Act. Therefore, for a breach of the bye-law the proprietors are not liable to be fined separately or more than Rs. 10 in all.

When a theatrical performance is continued later than 1 A. M. in violation of bye-law No. 83 of the Calcutta Corporation, the Calcutta Municipal Act provides a punishment for the offence and not for the individual offenders.

Per Chitty, J. The provisions of the Indian Penal Code have no direct bearing on the question of the interpretation of a bye-law of the Calcutta Corporation.

It will be ultra vires of the Calcutta Corporation to frame a bye-law under the Municipal Act providing separate punishments for offenders jointly implicated in a breach of the bye-law.

Per Teunon, J.—Under section 56 of the Calcutta Municipal Act a breach of a bye-law framed by the Calcutta Corporation makes the persons jointly guilty of the breach separately liable to be punished with a fine of Rs. 20 each. C AMRITA LAL BOSE v. CHAIRMAN OF THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA, 26 C. L. J. 29; 21 C. W. N. 109; 18 CR. L. J. 674 322

CHOTA NAGPUR TENANCY ACT (VI OF 1908), Ss. 87, 224 (2)—Declaration, suit for, that entry in Record of Rights is wrong—Appellate decree by

CHOTA NAGPUR TENANCY ACT—concl'd.

Judicial Commissioner—Appeal, second, whether lies to High Court—Decree, meaning of 891

—S. 24(2)—Declaration, suit for, that entry in Record of Rights is wrong—Appellate decree by Judicial Commissioner—Appeal, second, whether lies to High Court—Decree, meaning of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Ch. XLII.

Where the Judicial Commissioner in pronouncing judgment in an appeal makes an appellate decree within the meaning of section 224 (2) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, there is a second appeal from his decree to the High Court and the provisions of Chapter XLII of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, apply.

In a suit under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act filed in the Revenue Court for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights is wrong and that the lands are the zerait lands of the plaintiffs and that the defendants have no right of occupancy therein, a second appeal lies to the High Court from the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in appeal.

The word 'decree' in section 224, clause 2, of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act means 'decision' PAT LAL MAN NAIK v. KANHAYA LALL 891

CHOWKIDARI CHAKRAN LANDS—Putnidar, liability of, to pay additional rent— 395

CITY OF BOMBAY MUNICIPAL ACT (BOM. ACT III OF 1888). See BOMBAY CITY MUNICIPAL ACT.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (ACT XIV OF 1882), S. 248—High Court Original Side decrees, revivor of—Decree against several persons—Notice, issue of, to some—Limitation, fresh starting point of 608

—Ss. 274, 276, 295—Execution—Attachment—Sale of attached property by judgment-debtor—Subsequent attachment and sale of same property in execution of another decree—Execution purchaser and private purchaser, rights of.

Where certain immoveable properties of a judgment-debtor were successively attached in execution of two decrees held by the same decree-holder and were sold under the second attachment and purchased by the decree-holder himself and it was also found that on the day previous to the second attachment in pursuance whereof the execution sale was held, the judgment-debtor had conveyed the properties absolutely to the plaintiff by a private sale:

Held, in a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of the properties,

(1) that the private sale, being prior to the second attachment, took effect in preference to the Court sale;

(2) that under section 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the decree-holder could not take advantage of any attachment other than the one which actually led up to the sale and that, therefore, the decree-holder could not avail himself of the first and earlier attachment in execution of his earlier decree to render the sale to the plaintiff void.

Held, also (1) that the existence of assets in Court was a condition precedent to bring section 295 of the Code into play and there being none such in the case, the decree-holder was not entitled to rateable distribution;

(2), that even assuming that section 295 could apply and the conditions required by that section were fulfilled, the decree-holder could not under section 276 of the Code take advantage of any attachment other than the one which actually led up to the sale.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1882—concl'd.

Where a purchaser in Court auction questions the validity of a prior private sale on the ground that it was either benami or fraudulent, but admits that the vendor owed the private purchaser more than the actual consideration for the sale, the admission is a complete answer to the plea of benami and also operates strongly against the plea of fraudulent transfer. PC MINA KUMARI BIBI v. BIJOY SINGH, 32 M. L. J. 425; 1 P. L. W. 425; 21 C. W. N. 385; 5 L. W. 711; 21 M. L. J. 314; 15 A. L. J. 382; 25 C. L. J. 508; 19 Bom. L. R. 424; 1917) M. W. N. 473; 44 C. 662 242

—S. 319—Symbolical possession—Limitation.

An order of Court giving symbolical possession to an auction-purchaser under section 319, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, on an application by the auction-purchaser made more than 3 years after the sale is confirmed is not without jurisdiction and a nullity, as such an order can be made by the Court of its own motion, without the intervention in any way of the auction-purchaser, and no period is fixed for such an order under section 319 of the old Code. C HARISH CHANDRA ROY v. SARAT CHANDRA BANDOPADHYA 605
—CH. XLII 891

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (ACT V OF 1908)—Forms given in Schedule, whether control Code itself.

The forms given in the Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure cannot control the clear words of the Code itself. C MUNSUR ALI v. ABHOYA CHARAN DAS, 21 C. W. N. 1147 86

—S. 2, CL. (2)—Decree—Determination of right of party to account for certain years, whether decree—Appeal, whether lies

An adjudication by a Court determining the right of one party to an account for certain years and dismissing the claim for certain other years comes within the definition of a decree as given in section 2, clause (4), Civil Procedure Code, and as such is appealable. PAT NAND KUMAR SINGH v. BILAS RAM MARWARI, 1 P. L. W. 781 579

—Ss. 2 (2), 80, 97—Suit against public servant—Notice, necessity of—Preliminary decree, what is—Appeal.

The decision in a suit that a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code was necessary before the institution of the suit does not amount to a preliminary decree, where the plaintiff alleges that he has given notice, and the decision is not, therefore, appealable. U B NGA MEIK v. NGA GYI, 3 U. B. R. (197) 1 677

—S. 2 (11)—Legal representatives, suit against—Estate not in hands of legal representatives, effect of.

A suit against the legal representatives of a deceased debtor should not be dismissed on the mere ground that the defendants are not in possession of any portion of the estate left by the deceased. A SHANKAR LAL v. ABDUL RAHMAN 407

—S. 9 220

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— S. 11 587

— S. 11—Estoppel—Landlord and tenant—Decision in rent suit that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant—Suit for khas possession by landlord—Res judicata.

In a suit for rent in which the only issue was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the parties, it was found that the plaintiff had failed to prove such relationship. Thereupon the plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of the land from the defendant on the allegation that the defendant having in the previous rent suit denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, the plaintiff was entitled to recover khas possession:

Held, that the Court was precluded by the estoppel created by the decision in the rent suit, from finding that the plaintiff was the landlord, so that the plaintiff's suit for khas possession must fail.

C JATINDAR NATH BOSE v. MAHAMMAD MALLIK 659

— S. 11—Res judicata as between co-defendants—Finding on issue not in active controversy between defendants inter se, effect of—Vendor and purchaser—Mortgage by vendee, declaration of validity of, in action by vendor against vendee and his mortgagee—Transfer pending suit—Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882, s. 52.

M. sold certain properties to 1st defendant, who mortgaged them to plaintiff's father after purchase. M. brought a suit against 1st defendant and plaintiff for a declaration that both the said sale and mortgage were colourable transactions. The Court held that they were both valid. During the pendency of that litigation 1st defendant sold the property to 2nd defendant, who, in turn, transferred it to 3rd defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff to enforce the mortgage security:

Held, per Curiam, that the previous decree in favour of M., wherein the validity of the mortgage was admitted by both 1st defendant and the plaintiff's predecessor and which was not in active controversy between them, did not operate as res judicata in the present suit.

Held, by Phillips, J. (whose opinion prevailed under section 98, Civil Procedure Code), Oldfield, J., dissenting, that under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transfer to 2nd defendant could not affect the plaintiff's right to a valid mortgage over the property, a right which he obtained as the result of the suit during which the property was transferred.

M MANJESHWARA KRISHNAYA v. VASUDEVA MALLA 826

— S. 11—Res judicata—Finding on point on which opinion not invited—Construction of decree.

A finding or decision given by a Court on a matter on which its opinion is not invited does not operate as res judicata.

If a Court construes a decree as a final decree in any contested execution proceeding between the parties, that construction will operate as res judicata.

M SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB, (1917) M. W. N. 327 820

— S. 11—Res judicata—Parties, different, in subsequent suit.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

D. sued P. for rent on the allegation that he had settled certain kasht lands with him as under-tenant on produce rent. P. denied settlement under D. but set up direct tenancy under D. and his other co-sharers who were no parties to the suit. The suit was decreed. P. then instituted the present suit against D. and his other co-sharers for a declaration that he was a tenant directly under them:

Held, that the decision in the rent suit was res judicata so far as the question of settlement between P. and D. was concerned but not so with regard to the question of P's title. PAT PALKI PANDEY v. DWARKA PANDEY, 1 P. L. W. 634 530

— S. 11, O. XXIII, R. 1—Res judicata—Relinquishment of portion of claim without leave, consequence of 408

— S. 11—Res judicata—Rent suit—Decision as to annual rent payable—Subsequent suit.

Where in a suit for rent, the question as to what is the rent annually payable for the holding is directly raised and decided by the Court, the decision operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties or their representatives, unless it is shown that the rent has been subsequently changed. C JOGESHI CHANDRA ROY v. RAM KEBAL NATH 460

— S. 11—Suit to recover share of inheritance—Suit, subsequent, to recover share of gifted property, whether barred—Res judicata 255

— S. 11, O. XXIII, R. 1—Withdrawal of claim, order for—Incompetency of Court to permit withdrawal, effect of—Res judicata 611

— S. 20—Jurisdiction—Contract for sale and purchase of cotton and grain—Pukka arhat system—Accounts, rendition of, place of.

Plaintiffs, residents of Bareilly, sued the defendants, commission agents doing business in Bombay, in the Bareilly Court on the allegation that the defendants made a contract with the plaintiffs for the sale and purchase of cotton and grain under pukka arhat system and agreed to render accounts at Bareilly. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the Bareilly Court had no jurisdiction. The plaintiffs gave no evidence of the contract:

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Bombay Courts had jurisdiction. A LALTA PRASAD v. RAM SARUP 505 — Ss. 22, 23, 24, scope of—Transfer of case to Court not subordinate to same High Court, whether competent.

Section 24, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is exhaustive of the judicial power to transfer suits, and no Court has jurisdiction to transfer any suit from one Court to another unless both Courts are subordinate to it.

Even where a High Court has power to declare whether or not a suit shall proceed in a Court subordinate to it, it has no power to compel its institution in any Court beyond its jurisdiction.

The transfer of a suit from one Court to another is something entirely different in character and legal effect from making an order for the return of a plaint by one Court with a view to its being presented in another. N ABU BAKAR ABDUL RAHMAN & Co. v. RAMRUX, 13 N. L. R. 81 393

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— S. 24—Transfer of suit—Notice to parties, whether necessary.

The transfer of a suit under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code without giving notice to the parties is illegal. P ALI NAKI v. DAMODAR DAS, 33 P. W. R. 1917 111

S 34 (2)—Decree silent as to interest, construction of.

Where a decree is silent with respect to further interest from date of decree to date of payment, the Court must be deemed to have refused such interest and a separate suit will not lie for its recovery.

The matter must be treated as if the Court had exercised its discretion and refused to give interest, unless it can be shown that its silence was due to oversight or mistake. L B YAGAPPA CHETTY v. MAHOMED 858

— S 44—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 3, 25—Foreign Courts, decrees of, whether executable by Presidency Small Cause Courts—Registrar, power of, to issue process—Jurisdiction.

A Judge of a Presidency Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to execute the decree of a foreign Court transmitted to it under section 41, Civil Procedure Code.

But the Registrar of a Presidency Small Cause Court has no power, under section 13 or 25 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, to issue processes in execution of a foreign decree.

A decree transmitted for execution does not become the decree of the Court to which it is transmitted, although its powers of execution are similar to the powers conferred on it in respect of the execution of its own decrees. M SRINIVASA AIYANGAR v. NARAYANA AIYANGAR, (1917) M. W. N. 498; 6 L. W. 361 670

— S. 47, O. X. VII, R. 1—Application falling within s. 47 purporting to be under O. XLVII, r. 1—Form of application—Appeal.

On an application purporting to be made by the decree-holder certifying satisfaction of the decretal amount and asking for the dismissal of the execution case, the Munsif dismissed the case. Thereafter the decree-holder put in two other petitions questioning the genuineness of the application certifying satisfaction of the decree, and asking that the order passed thereon should be cancelled and the execution case allowed to proceed. The Munsif on an enquiry dismissed both the petitions on the finding that the decretal money had really been paid.

Held, that although the words "Order XLVII, rule 1" were to be found in the decree-holder's petitions and in the order sheet, yet having regard to their substance they must be treated as applications under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, so that an appeal did lie to the District Judge from the Munsif's order of dismissal. C JAGANNATH MONDUL v. JALADHAR MONDUL, 26 C. L. J. 37 839

— S. 47, O. XLV, R. 15 Revenue sale of ijmal share—Annulment of sale and recovery of possession of shares in ijmal share, suit for—Order in Council—Decree—Partition of ijmal share—Execution—Decree-holder, whether entitled to share substituted by partition for share decreed.

Plaintiffs brought a suit for the annulment of a revenue sale and recovery of possession of separate and distinct shares in an ijmal share and got a decree. The share had in the meantime been partitioned. On appeal the High Court reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. Seven of the original plaintiffs then appealed to His Majesty in Council and their appeal was allowed. Some of the appellants then applied to the High Court under Order XLV, rule 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. The matter was sent down to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the applicants were not entitled by means of proceedings in the Execution Department to ask the Court to enquire and determine what estates or interests had been substituted by the partition for the shares originally claimed and that the decree-holders could not get possession without bringing a regular suit to establish their title to the substituted estates or interests.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Held, that the decree-holders were entitled to ask the Subordinate Judge under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to ascertain in execution proceedings what estates and interests had been substituted for their original shares in the ijmal mahal and to give them possession of the substituted estates or interests. PAT RAVENESHWAR PRASAD v. BAIJNATH GOENKA, 1 P. L. W. 711; (1917) Pat. 205; 2 P. L. J. 496 508

— S. 48 820

— S. 60 (c)—Insolvent possessed of zemindari, whether agriculturist—House, whether can be sold.

Where the chief source of income of an insolvent at the time of his application is his zemindari, he is not an agriculturist in the true meaning of the word, although he cultivates some land, and his house is not, therefore, exempt from sale under section 60 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. A TEJ SINGH v. BANWARI LAL, 15 A. L. J. 540 544 — Ss. 80, 2 (2), 97—Suit against public servant—Notice, necessity of.

Plaintiffs sued defendant, the Bench Clerk of a Sub-Divisional Judge, for the recovery of a sum of money which they alleged had been lost through his carelessness in losing or concealing an application for the execution of a decree, which became time-barred through the loss.

Held, that the suit could not be instituted without giving the defendant a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The adjudication referred to in the definition of a decree in section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code is an adjudication granting or refusing any of the reliefs claimed in the plaint and embodied in a formal declaration. U B NGA MEIK v. NGA GYI, 3 U. B. R. (1917), 677

— S. 9, scope of—Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), s. 336, whether controls s. 91, Civil Procedure Code—Public highway, dedication of 74

— S. 92, applicability of—Trustee, de son tort.

Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, applies to the case of persons who are trustees de son tort. A SIDDHAN LAL v. GAURI SHANKAR 165

— S. 92—Management of trust—Court, discretion of.

In a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, a Court has complete discretion in arrang ing for the management of a trust to which the section applies, although it is the duty of the Court to take into consideration such matters as the wishes of the founder (where these can be ascertained) and also the past history of the institution and the way in which the management has been carried on theretofore. A DHARAM DASS v. SADIHO PRAKASH 177

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— S. 92—"Such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require", meaning of—Separate suits for same trust, consolidation of—Judge, power of—Jurisdiction.

The words "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require" in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code cover every subsidiary order or direction on any matter of detail necessary for carrying out the main purposes of the section.

Where more than two suits in the matter of the same trust have been sanctioned and are brought to trial, although with different parties, in the same Court, at the same time, on the same subject-matter, under the same circumstances and for the same kind of relief, a Judge has power under the Civil Procedure Code to consolidate the suits, that is to say, for the purpose of the hearing to merge them into one and treat them as one for all practical purposes.

A Judge making an express order consolidating such suits even without the consent of the parties acts within his jurisdiction. A DHARAM DAS v. DHARAM DAS 182

— S. 92—Trust created for public purposes of religious nature—Muhammadan, religious, founder of new religious order—Mausoleum, mosque and khanqah built to his memory, management of—Offerings, title to.

The management of the mausoleum, mosque and khanqah of a religious Muhammadan, who was the founder of a new religious order and to whom there could be no succession under any recognised rules, is a constructive trust created for public purposes of a religious nature, such as a Civil Court is competent to interfere with. O SHARFUDDIN v. MAQBULUNNISA, 4 O. L. J. 174 101

— S. 99, O. XXXIV, R. 1—Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Adverse claimants, joinder of, whether irregular—Misjoinder—Practice—Procedure 414

— S. 100 126

— Ss. 100, 101—Finding of fact grossly erroneous—Appeal, second, whether maintainable.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be.

Where in a suit for pre-emption the lower Appellate Court found that a portion of the consideration stated in the sale-deed was fictitious and that the price had not been fixed in good faith, the finding being based on the evidence of the vendee produced by the plaintiff as well as certain books of account:

Held, that the Chief Court was precluded from disturbing this finding in second appeal, even though the correctness of the lower Appellate Court's conclusions was open to doubt. P PHARAYA MAL v. ILAHI BAKHSI, 10 P. W. R. 1917; 89 P. R. 1917 772

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— S. 100 (a)—'Usage having the force of law,' meaning of—Private right, whether falls under s. 100 (a)—High Court.

The expression 'usage having the force of law' in section 100 (a), Civil Procedure Code, should ordinarily be confined to the usages of the country or of the community, the law merchant and usages referred to in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865. It is doubtful whether questions as to private rights fall within the section. M PANKAJAMMAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 5 L. W. 346; 32 M. L. J. 237; 21 M. L. T. 411 510

— S. 102—Appeal, second 655

— S. 102—Suit for damages for breach of contract—Appeal, second, whether lies—Mortgage—Zar-i-peshgi lease—Ejectment by lessor—Mortgagee, right of, to recover damages for dispossession 578 — Ss. 104 (2), 47, O. XXI, R. 90—Appeal, second, whether lies from appellate order setting aside sale—Fraud, antecedent to sale proclamation, allegation of 40 — S. 105 (2)—Decision on interlocutory matter, failure to appeal against, effect of.

Apart altogether from the doctrine of res judicata, a decision in a suit given on an interlocutory matter whether appealable or not, if not appealed from is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit. A HANSRAJ v. BIJAI RAM SINGH 641

— S. 107 (2) 846

— Ss. 109, 110, O. XLV, R. 3—Privy Council, appeal to—Certificate, conditions for grant of—Easement, decree as to, rights of—Value of subject-matter—Value of claims or right affected—'Substantial question of law,' meaning of—'Property' in section 110, para. 2, meaning of.

Where the subject-matter of a suit is an alleged easement right, which is negated by the final decree of the High Court, the real value of that right, for the purpose of an appeal to the Privy Council under the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, can be properly ascertained only on the basis of the detriment or injury which the party claiming the right would sustain by its being negated. And where the actual detriment or injury caused does not amount to Rs. 10,000, it is not a fit case for the grant of a certificate under paragraph 1 of section 110, Civil Procedure Code.

Paragraph 2 of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, is intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value is involved indirectly, though not directly. The second paragraph means that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are worth Rs. 10,000 and upwards, not that the rights affect properties whose value is Rs. 10,000 and upwards.

Under paragraph 3 of section 110, the case must involve a question of law of general interest or importance, and not the application of the law to the particular facts of the case.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The word 'property' in the second paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, means rights in property inferior to full ownership where such inferior rights alone are the subject-matter in dispute.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Per Spencer, J.—When some subsidiary interest, such as an easement of inconsiderable value attached to property of great value, is in dispute, the value of the property affected rather than the value of the subject-matter of the suit should determine the right of appeal. The claim must be one "to or respecting property" of Rs. 10,000 in value, not a claim merely affecting property of such value. M APPALA RAJA v. RANGAPPA NAICKER, (1917) M. W. N. 414; 6 L. W. 12; 33 M. L. J. 481 680

— S. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—"Substantial question of law"—Construction of document.

Scmble.—The construction of any particular document is not a substantial question of law within the meaning of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

A KALLYAN SINGH v. KANHIA LAL 110

— S. 115—High Court, revisional powers of, extent of—"Case," meaning of.

Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record and to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit. The section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it, it is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which jurisdiction is not involved.

The word "case" is not defined in the Code. It cannot be confined to litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain a particular relief against a defendant before the Court, and includes an ex parte application praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their judicial duties. It includes, therefore, proceedings under section 9 of Act XX of 1863. P C BALAKRISHNA UDAYAR v. VASUDEVA AIYAR, 15 A. L. J. 645; 2 P. L. W. 101; 33 M. L. J. 69; 26 C. L. J. 143; 19 Bom. L. R. 715; (1917) M. W. N. 628; 40 M. 793; 6 L. W. 501 650

— S. 115, O. XXIII, R. 1—Leave to withdraw with liberty to bring fresh suit—Insufficient grounds—Revision—High Court, interference by 77

— S. 115—Review—Discretion of subordinate Court—Revision—High Court, power of

The High Court in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, cannot interfere with the discretion of a subordinate Court as to whether it should or should not review its judgment. C BHAB SINDHU HALDAR v. KESAB CHANDRA HALDAR 405

— S. 115—Revision—Interlocutory order—High Court, power of, to interfere.

The Chief Court has power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders, but such power is exercised only in very exceptional cases, e. g., where the order is so unjust and is likely to put things into so inconvenient a position that irreparable harm would be done to the applicant for revision. P IMDAD ALI SHAH v. SAYED ALI, 26 P. R. 1917 65

— S. 115—Revision—Refusal to restore application to set aside appellate decree—Appeal, whether lies.

No appeal lies against an order refusing to restore an application to set aside an appellate decree which has been dismissed. But where there has been a serious miscarriage of justice, the High Court will admit the case on the revisional side. A KAMESHAR DAYAL v. MISRI LAL 336

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— S. 146 846

— S. 148, SCH. II, PARA. 16—Award fixing time for payment—Court, whether can extend time 609

— S. 151 999

— O. I, R. 1—Non-joinder of minor brother in suit to set aside alienation, effect of 664

— O. I, RR. 3, 5 429

— O II, R. 2, S. 11—Suit to recover share of inheritance—Suit, subsequent, to recover share of gifted property, whether barred—Res judicata—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Suit for declaration of share in decree, maintainability of.

One B. M. in his lifetime divided his moveable property among his four sons, S., K., B. and A., and directed that a sum of Rs. 3,000 odd due to him from one B. L. should be held jointly by all four of them. On his death S. sued the representatives of B. L. and got a decree for the whole sum as due to himself. K. then brought a suit to recover his share in the moveable and immoveable properties left by B. M. His suit was decreed in respect of the immoveable property but was dismissed as regards the moveable property, inasmuch as it was held that B. M. had divided all his moveable property among his sons in his lifetime. K. then sued for a declaration of his one-fourth share in the decree obtained by S. against B. L.'s representatives:

Held, (1) that the suit for a declaration was competent;

2) that inasmuch as the previous suit related to a share in the property left by B. M. it was not incumbent on K. to include in it a claim for a share in the property held by S. in which K. had an interest, and that, therefore, the suit was not barred either by Order II, rule 2 or by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. P SRI RAM v. KANSHI RAM, 12 P. L. R. 19 255

— O. II, RR. 3, 4 429

— O. II, RR. 6, 7—Possession or joint possession of particular plot, suit for recovery of, maintainability of—Frame of suit—Contradictory causes of action—Estoppel by pleading.

The plaintiff brought a suit in the alternative, first of all, to recover a particular land on the footing that a legal partition had been made between the parties, and if the partition was not legal, then he asked to be put in joint possession with the defendants. The case went to trial without any application by the defendants under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to exclude one of the causes of action from the trial. The Trial Court awarded the plaintiff a decree for joint possession, which was affirmed in appeal without any objection having been made to the frame of the suit:

Held, that in second appeal the defendant could not urge that the whole of the proceedings culminating in the decree for joint possession should be put an end to on the ground that contradictory causes of action ought not to have been tried together. C DWARIE BALA v. NIDHI RAM BALA 462

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1903—contd.

— O. IV, R. 1

587

— O. VI, RR. 16, 17

429

— O. VI, R. 16—Pleadings—Plaint, amendment of—Inconsistent allegations—Court, position of.

The rule that the Court is not to dictate to the parties how they should frame their case is one that ought always to be preserved sacred, subject to this limitation that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleadings which have been laid down by the law, and introduce what is unnecessary or tends to prejudice, embarrass and delay the trial of the suit.

Where in a suit for possession, the plaintiff denied the genuineness of the deed of wakf set up in defence and pleaded in the alternative that the deed had been obtained from her by the defendants by fraud and undue influence:

Held, that there was nothing in the above allegations that could be regarded as likely to embarrass, delay or prejudice the trial, so as to justify the Court in taking action under Order VI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code. O FARID-UN-NISA v. MUKHTAR AHMAD, 4 O. L. J. 230

488

— O. VI, R. 17, S. 115—Plaint, amendment of—Revision—High Court, power of, to interfere.

Plaintiff brought a suit claiming certain shares in the property in dispute. Before issues were settled he filed an application under Order VI, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, praying for leave to amend the plaint so as to increase the number of shares claimed. The lower Court rejected the application:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff should have been given leave to amend the plaint;

(2) that the Chief Court could interfere in revision with the order refusing leave to amend. P IMDAD ALI SHAH v. SAYED ALI, 26 P. R. 1917

65

O. VII, R. 11

429

— O. VII, R. 11—Rejection of plaint—Court-fee, deficient.

The provision of rule 11, Order VII, Code of Civil Procedure, is mandatory, so that a Court has no alternative but to reject a plaint written upon an insufficiently stamped paper, when the plaintiff on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within the time fixed by the Court fails to do so. C MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 44 C. 352; 21 C. W. N. 834

96

O. VIII, RR. 1 to 10, O. IX, RR. 6 (1) (a)

(7), 13—Omission of defendant to file written statement—Declaration of ex parte, validity of.

A defendant in a suit appeared in person on 4th September 1915; he was then ordered to file a written statement and given time till 21st September 1915; on the latter date, he appeared and asked for further time. The request was refused, and he was declared ex parte:

Held, per Ayling, J. (Seshagiri Aiyar, J., dissenting), that the order declaring the defendant ex parte was not ultra vires.

Per Ayling, J.—The rules in Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code, intervening between rules 1 and 9, are all directed to making clear what should be contained in a written statement referred to in rule 1. They are really of the nature of explanations to rule 1. Rule 10 of Order VIII relates back to rule 1 as well as to rule 9

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J., (dissenting).—A party should not be declared ex parte when he appears in person, though his defence may be struck out

The omission to make a provision in rule 13 of Order IX, regarding the non-filing of a written statement, is a clear indication that a declaration of ex parte can be made only for the non-appearance of a party.

The words "from whom a written statement is required" in rule 9 of Order VIII, cannot be read as referring back to rule 1. A whole mass of matter intervenes between the two rules and it would be doing violence to the language to read those words as referring to rule 1. Rule 10 cannot be connected with rule 1 of Order VIII. M RANGASAMI UDAYAN v. MANICKAM PILLAI, (1917 M. W. N. 241

223

— O. VIII, R. 6—Set-off, principles governing.

In a suit for the recovery of money the defendant is not allowed to set off against the plaintiff's demand any sum which is not an ascertained sum legally recoverable and the claim with respect to which does not arise out of the same transaction. PAT BISHUN CHAND v. AUDH BIHARI LAL, 1 P. L. W. 615; 2 P. L. J. 45; (1917 Pat 279

350

— O. IX, R. 5—Defendant not served—Suit consigned to record room—Second suit on same cause of action, maintainability of

In a suit on a bond it appeared that the plaintiff had, on the 19th February 1909, brought a suit for recovery on the same bond against the same defendants, but as one of the defendants could not then be served, the Court had, on the 10th March 1909, consigned the suit to the record room, making a reference to Order IX, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that it was impossible for the Court to dismiss the first suit under Order IX, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, that it was still pending and that, therefore, a second suit on the same cause of action was not maintainable. P NANAK CHAND v. NUR-UD-DIN

448

— O. IX, R. 13—Suit against principal and surety—Decree ex parte against principal whether can be set aside without discharging surety—Plaintiff withdrawing suit against principal, effect of.

A decree was passed against a principal debtor and his surety, the decree being ex parte against the principal debtor. He thereupon applied to have the decree set aside. Plaintiff consented to have his suit against the principal debtor dismissed on condition that he was allowed to execute his decree against the surety. The Small Cause Court Judge passed an order in these terms:

Held, (1) that the Judge was in error in setting aside the decree against the principal debtor without setting it aside against the surety as well;

(2) that the plaintiff having withdrawn his suit against the principal debtor, his suit against the surety was liable to be dismissed. P MUNSHI RAM v. MADAYA RAM

400

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— O. XX, R. 4 (1)—Judgment of Small Cause Court, contents of.

The judgment of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the point for determination and the decision thereon. L B KO KYAW ZAN v. DAW MYA 890

— O. XX, R. 14—Pre-emption—Decree, conditional upon payment into Court, compliance with—Mortgage of subject-matter of decree by decree-holder.

Plaintiff obtained a decree for pre-emption conditional on payment into Court of the pre-emption money within a certain period. He raised the amount by a simple mortgage of the decreed property itself and paid it into Court:

Held, that it was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the decree. A LAKHPAT SINGH v. BABU RAM 35

— O. XX, R. 18 820

— O. XXI, R. 2—Adjustment, certifying of—Rule, applicability of, to complex decrees.

Order XXI, rule 2 (1), which requires certifying to Court of adjustments made out of Court of decrees 'of any kind' applies not only to money decrees, but includes complex decrees under which possession of immoveables is also awarded and, as regards execution of that portion of the decree, an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized. M SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB, (1917) M. W. N. 327 820

— O. XXI, R. 2—Adjustment of decree out of Court not certified to Court, whether can be recognised.

An adjustment of a decree out of Court can, under no circumstances, be recognised unless certified to Court. M MATIFAR DRAVIA SAHAYA ELA NIDHI CO. LTD. v. SUBRAMANIA PILLAI, 5 L. W. 644 889

— O. XXI, R. 2—Decree, adjustment of—Decree-holder, right of, to release some or all judgment-debtors from liability

Under Order XXI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, a decree-holder and his judgment-debtor can adjust their respective rights and liabilities in regard to the decree in any manner agreed upon by them including the discharge of the judgment-debtor.

There is nothing in Order XXI, rule 2, or any other provision of the Civil Procedure Code to prevent the release by the decree-holder of some of the judgment-debtors from their liability under the decree. PAT LALJI SINGH v. GIRJA PRASAD SINGH 1

— O. XXI, R. 2—Mortgage—Payment of amount awarded by preliminary decree out of Court, whether can be recognized without certification.

On an application made for a decree absolute in a suit to enforce a mortgage security by way of sale, the Court cannot take cognizance of the payment to the mortgagee out of Court of the amount awarded by the preliminary decree, which has not been certified to the Court under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. C PIRAN BIBI v. JITENDRA MOHAN, 25 C. L. J. 553; 21 C. W. N. 920 845

— O. XXI, R. 4, whether restricted to decrees of British Courts.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Order XXI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, is not restricted in its application to decrees of British Courts, it applies equally to decrees of foreign Courts. M SRINIVASA AIYANGAR v. NARAYANA AIYANGAR, (1917) M. W. N. 498; 6 L. W. 361 670

— O. XXI, R. 22—Arrest without notice, legality of.

Sub-clause (1) of Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, is imperative and must be followed, unless notice prior to arrest is dispensed with under sub-clause (2), in which case the Court should definitely record its reasons for doing so. M SRINIVASA AIYANGAR v. NARAYANA AIYANGAR, (1917) M. W. N. 498; 6 L. W. 361 670

— O. XXI, R. 22—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 248—High Court Original Side decrees, revivor of Decree against several persons—Notice, issue of, to some—Limitation, fresh starting point of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 182, 183.

Both on the reason of the thing and on the analogy of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code which apply the doctrine of revivor to India, as regards the revivor of the decrees of the High Court, Original Side, notice must go to the parties against whom it is sought to revive the decree.

Explanation I in the 3rd column of Article 182 of the Limitation Act refers only to applications under the Article and has nothing to do with the revivor of Original Side decrees. M KRISHNAIAH v. GAJENDRA NAIDU, 22 M. L. T. 20; 6 L. W. 290 608

O. XXI, R. 35—Delivery of possession to agent.

Under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 35, of the Civil Procedure Code, delivery of possession can be made to any person orally authorised by the decree-holder to take possession, even though he does not hold a power-of-attorney from the latter. N LAVA v. EMPEROR, 3 N. L. R. 87; 18 Cr. L. J. 689 689

— O. XXI, R. 53 (1) (b) ii 816

— O. XXI, R. 90, Ss. 104 (2), 47—Appeal, second, whether lies from appellate order setting aside sale—Fraud, antecedent to sale proclamation, allegation of.

An order in first appeal setting aside an execution sale on the ground of fraudulent suppression of the sale proclamation and consequent inadequacy of price does not become open to second appeal, merely because the judgment-debtor impeached the sale not only on the ground of fraud in the publication of sale but also on the ground of fraud antecedent to the publication, and the Court of First Appeal held that the latter was not established.

Quære.—Whether the decision of a question of fraud antecedent to the publication and conduct of an execution sale brings the case within the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. C FULSUMMANESSA BIBE v. HALAMADDI MOLLA, 25 C. L. J. 399 426

— O. XXI, R. 90—Irregularity in sale proclamation—Two valuations—Substantial injury—Proof.

It is essential for a judgment-debtor in order to succeed on an application under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code to show that the inadequacy of the prices stated in the sale proclamation was caused in consequence of the irregularity alleged.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1903—contd.

A sale proclamation stating two separate valuations, the decree-holder's valuation and the judgment-debtor's valuation, is not irregular. PAT NAND KISHWAR SAHAI v. KEDAR NATH 849

— O. XXII, R. 4—Preliminary decree—Death of defendant before final decree—Application for substitution

A preliminary decree does not put an end to a suit; it must be continued up to the stage of the final decree.

Where after the passing of a preliminary decree in a suit the defendant died, and an application to bring his representatives on the record was made more than six months after his death:

Held, that the application was barred by time. A MOTI LAL v. RAM NARAIN, 15 A. L. J. 549 1006

— O. XXII, R. 10, 11—O. XXIII, R. 1 (1), Ss. 107 (2), 146—Devolution of interest pending suit—Application under O. XXII, r. 10, after decree, maintainability of—Appeal, right of, by person acquiring interest who was no party to decree appealed against—Merits of appeal—Court, duty of.

Order XXII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to cases wherein the new party alleging acquisition of an interest takes action after the decree and before the appeal against it is begun. The discretion of the Court to allow or refuse the substitution of a new party under the rule should be exercised only in connection with pending proceedings in which the material considerations of immediate convenience are within its knowledge. The new party cannot apply, under the rule, to be impleaded only for the purpose of preferring an appeal against a concluded decree.

The appeal can, however, be entertained under section 146, Civil Procedure Code, if the merits are in favour of the appellant, so that substantial justice may not be defeated. M SUBBA PILLAI v. RANGASAMI, (1917) M. W. N. 306 846

— O. XXII, R. 10, 11—Official Receiver, appeal by—Continuation of proceedings by successor without amendment of cause—Title, validity of—Intimation of change to Court—Decision on merits, effect of.

Quere—Whether, on the resignation of his office by an Official Receiver maintaining a suit or appeal his successor can continue the proceedings without his name being brought on the record.

Where, however, the change of personnel was intimated to the Court, which proceeded notwithstanding to pronounce a decision on the merits, the record must be deemed to have been amended by substitution of the name of the new officer in place of the one who had vacated office. M RAMAKRISHNA IYER v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, TINNEVELLY, 5 L. W. 507; 32 M. L. J. 170

— O. XXIII, R. 1, S. 11—Appeal—Withdrawal of suit—Res judicata.

Once a case is taken on appeal it cannot be said to have been finally determined until the Appellate Court has adjudicated upon the question in issue between the parties, and by reason of the Court allowing the suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiff it cannot be said that its order possesses that necessary degree of finality so as to operate as res judicata relative to the rights of the parties to the antecedent litigation. PAT RAM LOCHAN SINGH v. JATADHARI SINGH 853

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— O. XXIII, R. 1, S. 115—Leave to withdraw with liberty to bring fresh suit—Insufficient grounds—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The mere fact that the Primary Court granted leave to a plaintiff, to withdraw from his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on insufficient grounds is no ground for the High Court's interference in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, unless the lower Court in granting leave acted without jurisdiction or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

C BASUDEB NARAYAN SINHA v. KADAMBINI DASSI 77

— O. XXIII, R. 1, S. 11—Res judicata—Relinquishment of portion of claim without leave, consequence of.

In a suit for recovery of possession of land, the plaintiff included within the boundaries described in the plaint two parcels A and B, and put forward his claim for ejectment in respect of both on the allegation that the defendants had dispossessed him therefrom, but before the Commissioner at the local enquiry, and at the trial, the plaintiff relinquished his claim without leave of the Court in respect of the parcel B, with the result that the suit was dismissed with regard to that parcel:

Held, that a subsequent suit for recovery of possession of parcel B against the same defendants was res judicata and was also barred under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, as the dispossession which was the cause of action in both the suits was in reality the same, although the plaintiff falsely alleged, in his plaint in the subsequent suit, dispossession at a later date. C DANESH MOLLA v. DHANANJOY BISWAS 408

— O. XXIII, R. 1—Will—Probate, application for, withdrawal of—Court, duty of—O. XXIII, R. 1, applicability of, to Probate proceedings 345

— O. XXIII, R. 1, S. 11—Withdrawal of claim, order for—Incompetency of Court to permit withdrawal, effect of—Res judicata—Jurisdiction, irregular exercise of.

An order permitting the withdrawal of a claim under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, which is beyond the competency of the Court to pass, is not a nullity but an order passed in the irregular exercise of jurisdiction, and such an order does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief.

Even if the order in the earlier suit be treated as a nullity, a second suit for the same relief is not barred as the claim remains undisposed of. M THULJARAM ROW v. GOPALA AIYAR, (1917) M. W. N. 234; 20 M. L. T. 229; 32 M. L. J. 434 611

— O. XXIII, R. 3—Agreement dealing with matters not included in claim, whether lawful.

A compromise is not unlawful within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, merely because it deals with matters not included in the claim. In such a case the Court should see how far it relates to the matters in suit and should pass a decree in regard to those matters. P HARI CHAND v. MAGHI MAL, 95 P. W. R. 1917; 12 P. L. R. 1917; 78 P. R. 1917 675

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— O. XXIII, R. 3, O. XXXIV, R. 5—Preliminary decree—Part payment out of Court—Adjustment of such payment, whether permissible at final decree.

There is nothing in Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code to justify the view that Order XXIII, rule 3, does not apply to adjustments of accounts made between the date of the preliminary decree and the date on which the accounts between the parties are finally settled.

If a preliminary decree is satisfied in part out of Court, the Court at the final taking of accounts will permit such payment towards the satisfaction of the decree. PAT JOGENDRA PRASAD NARAIN SINGH v. GOURI SANKAR PRASAD SAHU, 2 P. L. W. 66; 2 P. L. J. 533 138

— O. XXXII, R. 4—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Adverse interest—Consent of guardian—Minor, decree against—Suit to set aside decree—Prejudice to minor—Proof.

The mere omission to obtain the consent of the person whom it is proposed to appoint guardian ad litem of a minor is not fatal to the proceeding. It must be shown that the minor was prejudiced by the defect.

A minor when he comes of age can attack a decree obtained against him during his minority upon the ground that the person who represented him in the litigation had an adverse interest, but he must show that in that particular case that particular person had in fact a particular adverse interest. He cannot be allowed to succeed on mere surmise.

Where S., a minor, was sued on a mortgage-bond executed on his behalf by his mother for legal necessity and benefit of the minor, and the mother, who was also the certificated guardian of the person and property of the minor, was appointed his guardian ad litem, but she failed to appear in the suit though notice was served upon her, and a decree was passed against the minor:

Held, that the decree could not be set aside merely on the ground that the mother's consent to act as guardian ad litem was not obtained, when it was proved that the minor was in no way prejudiced by the procedure adopted PAT SURAJ DEO NARAIN MISSRA v. SARJUG PRASAD MISSRA, 1 P. L. W. 647; (1917) PAT. 198; 2 P. L. J. 390 227

— O. XXXII, R. 4 (3)—Minor—Guardian ad litem.

The provisions of rule 4 (3) of Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code are mandatory and imperative in their nature and it would amount to want of jurisdiction in the Court to appoint a guardian ad litem on behalf of a minor without his consent.

PAT MOHAN KRISHNA DAR v. HAR PRASAD 2

— O. XXXII, R. 7—Agreement varying terms of decree—Parties minors—Agreement, whether can be avoided.

An agreement varying the terms of a decree between parties who are minors, which is not sanctioned by the Court under Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, can be avoided by each of the parties as against the other. A party who is barred by limitation from actively avoiding it as plaintiff can, however, defend a suit brought against him on that agreement by pleading the voidability of the transaction as against him. M SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB, (1917) M. W. N. 327 820

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

— O. XXXIV—Mortgage—Scheme for payment under decree for foreclosure, sale or redemption.

The procedure under the provisions of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, is essentially different from the procedure in a mortgage suit under the terms of the repealed sections of the Transfer of Property Act and the method of payment to the mortgagee as authorised by the Transfer of Property Act has been abolished.

The scheme stated under the terms of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, for the payment of mortgage money under a decree for foreclosure, sale or redemption noted. C PIRAN BIBI v. JITENDRA MOHAN, 25 C. L. J. 553; 21 C. W. N. 920 845

— O. XXXIV, R. 1—Mortgage-decree against father—Execution—Sale—Redemption, suit for, by son not in existence at date of decree, maintainability of—Right of son not made party to suit.

A son, who was not born at the date of a mortgage-decree and sale, cannot bring a suit for redemption of the mortgage; nor can a son succeed in a redemption suit after sale on the sole ground that he was not impleaded as a party in the mortgage suit against his father, even though the mortgagee had notice of his existence, unless it is proved that he was intentionally omitted from the mortgage suit in order to defeat his right to redeem. PAT SUBBAL SINGH v. RAMESHWAR SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 736 525

— O. XXXIV, R. 1, S. 99—Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Adverse claimants, joinder of, whether irregular—Misjoinder—Practice—Procedure.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, it is not irregular to implead persons claiming title to the mortgaged property adversely to the mortgagor.

Even if the joinder of such persons amounts to misjoinder and the Trial Court does not take the necessary steps to cure the defect before deciding the suit, the Appellate Court should not reverse the decision of the Court of First Instance on the ground of misjoinder alone, unless such misjoinder has affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

The question whether merits or jurisdiction have been affected should not be assumed but should be deduced from the facts of each case, the evidence and the course of the trial in the Court of First Instance. M PUMULLI MANAKAL NARAYANAN v. VENKITAJELA AIYAR, 5 L. W. 615; (1917) M. W. N. 417 414

— O. XXXIV, R. 1—Mortgage suit—Stranger to mortgage—Proper parties.

Where a prior mortgagee of an entire property brought a suit against his mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee of a portion of the property, and the applicants sought to be made parties to the suit on the allegation that they were the owners of the whole property and had executed the subsequent mortgage:

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Held, that the applicants were not strangers, but proper parties, to the suit. O NAGESHWAR SHUKUL v. JASODRA, 4 O. L. J. 352 288

— O. XXXIV, R. 5—Instalment decree—Default—Application for final decree, nature of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181.

Under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, an application for a final decree is not an application in execution.

In a suit on a mortgage a compromise was effected by which the defendant was required to pay the money by certain instalments and in default of payment of any one instalment the property was to be sold for the full amount of the claim. On default being made, the decree-holder applied under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, for a final decree. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decree was barred by time.

Held, that Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applied to the case and that time began to run from the date when default was made. A RAMJI LAL v. KARAM SINGH, 15 A. L. J. 448 424

— O. XXXIV, R. 5, O. XXIII, R. 3—Preliminary decree—Part payment out of Court—Adjustment of such payment, whether permissible at final decree 138

— O. XXXIV, R. 14, 15—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Decree on security bond—Execution—Property charged, whether can be sold—Rateable contribution—Value of properties, determination of.

The respondent executed a security bond in favour of the appellant by which some properties were made security for a certain sum. A money decree was obtained by the appellant on the bond which, though it declared a lien on the properties mentioned in the bond, did not amount to a decree on the footing of a mortgage.

Held, that the decree-holders could not bring the charged properties to sale in execution of the decree and that their only course was to institute a suit on the lien declared by the decree.

The distinction between section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and rule 14 of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, pointed out.

Semle—Where several properties are made security for a debt, in order to determine the liability of each property to contribute rateably to the debt, the practice of the High Court is to take the valuation of the properties at the date of the instrument creating the security. C GORIND CHANDRA PAL v. KAILASH CHANDRA PAL, 25 C. L. J. 354 230

O. XXVIII, R. 6 816

— O. XL, R. 1, O. XLIII, CL. (s)—Receiver, order for appointment of, without naming person, nature of—Appeal.

Per Abdur Rohim and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.—The pronouncement by a Court that a Receiver should be appointed without naming a specific person is an order under Order XL, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, and is appealable under Order XLIII, clause s.

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—An order for the appointment of a Receiver is as much an order appointing a Receiver as an order naming a particular person as Receiver and the right of appeal conferred by clause (s) of Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, against orders under Order XL, rule 1, is not restricted to any particular kind of order but against all orders under the latter rule.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Per Spencer, J. dissenting.—An order that a Receiver should be appointed is merely interlocutory and as it cannot be put into operation until some one is actually appointed, an appeal against the same is premature. M PALANIAPPA CHETTY v. PALANIAPPA CHETTY, 32 M. L. J. 204; 40 M. 18; (1917) M. W. N. 393; 5 L. W. 776 185

— O. XLI, R. 4, applicability of.

The provisions of Order XLI, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to a case where the grounds of appeal are not common to all the appellants. P NANDA v. JAI CHAND, 35 P. W. R. 1917 184

— O. XLI, R. 10, CL. (2)—Appeal, dismissal of—Re-admission—Judge, power of.

A Judge has jurisdiction to re-admit an appeal dismissed by an order under clause (2), rule 10, Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code.

But an order re-admitting such an appeal without notice to the other side is not binding on it. C GOLJAN BIBI v. NAFAR ALI 234

— O. XLI, R. 22—Appeal—Practice—Respondent, whether can maintain decree on ground decided against him—Cross-objections—Suit for declaration of invalidity of gift—Non-ancestral property.

One B. made an oral gift of his landed property to his unmarried daughters and mutation of the gifted land was effected in favour of the donees. On B's death his collaterals in the sixth degree sued for a declaration to the effect that the gift made by B. to his daughters should not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the widow. The Subordinate Judge, holding that the land was ancestral but that by custom applicable to the parties the gift was valid, dismissed the suit. In appeal it was contended by the defendants that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to question the gift because the land in suit was not the ancestral property of B. The District Judge refused to hear arguments on the point because no cross-objections had been filed against the finding that the land was ancestral.

Held, (1) that the decree of the Subordinate Judge being one dismissing the suit, the defendants in their capacity of respondents in the District Judge's Court were entitled to maintain that decree upon any ground decided against them by the Subordinate Judge without filing any cross-objections under Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, and that the District Judge acted illegally in declining to hear arguments on the question whether the land in dispute was ancestral or not;

(2) that the evidence on the record was insufficient to prove that the land was ancestral and that the plaintiffs' suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed upon this ground alone. P PARSANI v. MANGAL SINGH, 103 P. L. R. 1917 237

— O. XLI, R. 23, 25—Remand—Preliminary point—Decision on some issues—Order, proper.

Under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, it is only when the Appellate Court reverses the order of the Court of First Instance on a preliminary point that the suit should be remanded.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—contd.

Therefore, where an Appellate Court decides some of the issues in a case and leaves the other issues to be decided by the Trial Court, the case should be remanded under Order XLI, rule 25, and not under Order XLI, rule 23. A KALLU v. BHAGIRATH LAL 58

— O. XLI, RR. 24, 25—Issues, re-settling of—Framing new issue—Remand—Procedure.

The Court of First Instance decided a case on framing a material issue as: "Have the plaintiff and his co-villagers their alleged right of way by necessity, grant or prescription". The Judge in the First Appellate Court, coming to the conclusion that the issue which was really material had not been stated in the Court below, framed the issue thus: "Has the plaintiff acquired the right of user over the disputed path by virtue of any custom," and then purporting to act under Order XLI, rule 24, Civil Procedure Code, dealt with the case on the evidence as it stood, without taking any further evidence or remanding the case for further evidence:

Held, that the Judge acted wrongly as he did not realise that he was not re-settling the issues, but was framing an entirely new issue, and that the proper course for him to take was to proceed under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code. C LASKARI v. ABBAS BEPARI, 25 C. L. J. 527 411

— O. XLI, RR. 26, 31—Failure to file objections—Court, duty of.

The omission of a party to file objections against a finding, under rule 16 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, does not relieve an Appellate Court of the duty imposed upon it by rule 31 of the order to give its decision on the issue. S JERAMDAS v. WADERO SHAH ALI, 10 S. L. R. 203 405

— O. XLIII, R. 1 (1) 846

— O. XLIII, CL. (s), O. XL, R. 1—Receiver, order for appointment of, without naming person, nature of—Appeal 185

— O. XLV, R. 3 680

— O. XLV, R. 15—Revenue sale of ijmal share—Annulment of sale and recovery of possession of shares in ijmal share, suit for—Order in Council—Decree—Partition of ijmal share—Execution—Decree-holder, whether entitled to share substituted by partition for share decreed 508

— O. XLVII, R. 1, S. 47—Application falling within s. 47 purporting to be under O. XLVII, r. 1—Form of application—Appeal 839

— O. XLVII, R. 1 (c)—Review—Document not produced at trial—Negligence.

Where a document which was not produced before judgment through gross negligence is subsequently produced and shows that an injustice has been done, the interests of justice demand that the party to whom the injustice has been done should be granted a review notwithstanding his negligence. PAT BHAGELA KUE v. ABDUL RAHMAN 70

— SCH II, PARAS 4, 15—Arbitration and award—Arbitrator giving evidence before his colleagues, effect of—Majority award, validity of—Party deliberately absents himself—Misconduct of arbitrators.

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE—1908—conold.

The mere fact that one of three arbitrators gave evidence before the others, does not constitute misconduct on the part of the arbitrators so as to vitiate their award.

A majority award by the arbitrators is not bad, merely because the reference to arbitration did not provide that the opinion of the majority should prevail, where the application to Court for reference contained a provision to that effect.

Where one of the parties to an arbitration deliberately absents himself from the hearing, the award concluded on the hearing of the arbitration in his absence is not bad. C HARIDAS DATTA v. BAIDYA NATH GHOSE, 21 C. W. N. 895 646

— SCH. II, PARA. 16, S. 148—Award fixing time for payment—Court, whether can extend time.

A valid award on a voluntary reference in a pending suit is binding and conclusive on all the parties and the Court is not authorised to interfere with any portion of it.

Where in a suit, the matter in dispute is referred to arbitration by agreement of the parties and an award is duly made by which one of the parties is directed to pay a certain sum to the other party within a specified time and a decree is made thereon, the Court has no power to extend the time fixed by the award for the payment, even on the ground that the case is a hard one. C ABINASH CHANDRA DAS v. HEM KUMARI DAS 609

— PARAS. 17, 5, 19—Agreement, private, to refer to arbitration—Matters, some, covered by pending suits—Arbitrator refusing to act—Substitution of arbitrator—Court, power and duty of.

Where, after the filing of an agreement under paragraph 17, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, one of the arbitrators refuses to act as such, the Court has power, under paragraph 19 read with paragraph 5, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, to substitute another arbitrator in place of the refusing arbitrator.

A private agreement to refer to arbitration certain matters, some of which form the subject of pending suits, is not interdicted; but, where an application is made under paragraph 17, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, with respect to the filing of such an agreement, the order of the Court directing the reference to arbitration must be confined to the matters not covered by the suits pending on the date of the agreement, unless those suits have meanwhile been withdrawn or stayed pending the reference. O RAHAT ULLAH KHAN v. IBAD ULLAH KHAN, 4 O. L. J. 131 38

COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE WITH ENEMIES ORDINANCE (VI OF 1914) 851

— (War Proclamation of 12th September 1914)—Contract, C. I. F., for sale of goods by enemy firm—Declaration of hostilities before delivery of documents, effect of 526

COMPANIES ACT (VII OF 1913), S. 153—Creditors and share-holders, meeting of—Arrangement—Acceptance by creditors not present at meeting, effect of—Majority.

In a meeting held under the provisions of section 153 of the Companies Act, the written acceptance of the arrangement by those share-holders and creditors who are not present, either in person or by proxy, cannot be taken into consideration to make up the majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the share-holders and creditors. ○ KASHMIRI BANK, LTD. v. GOKUL CHAND, 4 O. L. J. 10 57

COMPANIES ACT.—concl'd.

— S. 153—Scheme of composition, when takes effect—Declaration, suit for, that plaintiff's liability on pro-note has ceased—Frame of suit.

Plaintiff had a deposit of Rs. 4,000 in the defendant Bank payable on the 10th October 1914. On the 3rd September 1914 he borrowed Rs. 2,000 at 12 per cent. per annum on the security of his deposit and executed a pro-note for the amount. On the 8th October 1914 the Bank suspended payment, and on the 12th and 13th October the plaintiff wrote to the Bank to pay him the balance after deducting Rs. 2,000, and received a reply that as the Bank had stopped business no action could be taken. The Bank started business again on the 1st July 1915 under a scheme sanctioned by the Allahabad High Court, by which debentures and preference shares were to be issued to all "fixed depositors" in lieu of their deposits. The plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration that his liability on the pro-note had come to an end and for an injunction that the Bank be directed to make entries in the books accordingly:

Held, (1) that the operation of the scheme sanctioned by the High Court did not date back to the time when the Bank suspended payment but that it affected only those persons who were creditors at the time when the sanction was accorded by the Court;

(2) that at the latter date the plaintiff's debt had come to an end and he was a creditor to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and that the arrangement must, therefore, be confined in its operation to his position as a creditor to that extent;

(3) that inasmuch as the Bank wanted the plaintiff to accept the position of a creditor to the extent of Rs. 4,000 and that of a debtor for Rs. 2,000 and the plaintiff repudiated his liability as such, urging that he was a creditor to the extent of Rs. 2,000, and was prepared to accept the terms of the scheme to that extent, no other remedy was open to him to have an adjudication upon his alleged liability as a debtor other than the action for declaration and injunction as brought by him and that he was, therefore, entitled to the relief claimed. P. CHHUNNU LAL v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., DELHI, 106 P. W. R. 1917 904

CONFESSION, how to be made—Magistrate, duty of, when recording confession 721
—, retracted—Corroboration 703

CONSTRUCTION OF DOCUMENT—Bond authorising suit on default of payment of yearly interest or of principal after fixed period—Suit for principal sum—Cause of action.

Where an unregistered bond executed on the 1st of July 1906 provided that the borrower was to pay interest yearly and the principal sum was to be paid within a period of six years and the general clause relating to what was to happen in case of default was, "dar surat wada khilafi mahajan markur ke ikhtiar hasil hai ki jaidad mankurta wa ghair mankurta se wasul kar len."

CONSTRUCTION OF DOCUMENT—concl'd.

Held, that on the proper construction of these words, the plaintiff had a cause of action for a suit for the principal sum, if he brought it within three years from the date of the period fixed for payment, but that the suit for interest which had not been paid for more than three years was barred. ○ AMIR HAIDAR KHAN v. RAM DAT, 20 O. C. 152 229 —Intention.

For the purpose of construing a document the Court has to look at the whole of the document and consider all its terms one with the other, and for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties the Court is also entitled to look at the position of affairs at the time when the document was entered into and also at the position of the parties who executed the document.

Per Chatterjee, J. If the expressions used in a deed are capable of two constructions, that construction should be adopted which is consistent with the law to which the parties are subject. C. MOHAMAD UMAR v. MAN KOER, 21 C. W. N. 903 783

—Kabuliyat—Agreement to deliver half produce or pay fixed sum—Landlord's right to insist upon half produce 836

—Lease—Heritable rights—Lessee holding over, position of 116

—Sale-deed, interpretation of 361

CONTEMPORANEA EXPOSITIO, doctrine of, applicability of 581

CONTRACT, construction of—Contract for supply of goods by agent of enemy firm—Declaration of hostilities before arrival of vessel—Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance (VI of 1914)—Capture of vessel and condemnation by Prize Court—Subsequent release, effect of—Breach of contract—Damages, liability for—Contract Act (IX of 1872, s. 56, illus. (d).

Defendants, agents of a German firm, contracted on 25th August 1914 to deliver to plaintiff at Madura certain casks of dye in 3 instalments of 2 casks each 'to be delivered on arrival of the steamers, one lot of two casks to be delivered each time at Rs. 501-4-0 for each cask.' The defendants were not to be responsible if the steamers did not come to Madras or Tuticorin, the port for Madura, where the goods were to be consigned. One of the steamers, Barenfels, left Hamburg and Antwerp before the outbreak of war but before it could arrive, war had broken out and the Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance was in force. The Barenfels and her cargo were captured in October 1914 and condemned by the Prize Court. She was, however, subsequently released and allowed to proceed on her voyage to Colombo. The defendants were precluded from taking delivery of the goods, unless they deposited a sum amounting to twice the invoice value of the goods. In an action for damages for breach of contract against the defendants:

Held, that the defendants were not liable inasmuch as:

(1) on the true construction of the contract the defendants were not liable to deliver the goods even if the steamer did arrive when there were no such goods in it.

CONTRACT—concl'd.

(2) the capture of the ship was one of the possibilities contemplated under the clause in the contract relating to the non-arrival of steamers which relieved the defendants from the obligation to supply the goods on the said contingency;

(3) the condemnation of the goods related back and divested the owners of the goods as from the date of seizure and the effect of the proclamation was to render the further performance of the contract illegal;

(4) the subsequent release of the vessel and her cargo did not impose on the defendants any obligation to purchase the goods at a greatly enhanced price from the Prize authorities and make them over to the plaintiff. M BANGHY ABDUL RAZACK SAHIB v. KHANDI RAO 851

CONTRACT ACT (IX OF 1872), S. 15—Coercion—Threat to commit suicide, whether 'coercion'—Suicide, whether 'act forbidden by the Penal Code'—'To the prejudice of any person whatever', meaning of—Document, execution of, under threat of suicide, validity of.

Per Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., (Oldfield, J., dissenting).—A threat to commit suicide, in consequence of which a document is executed by a person, is the threatening to commit an 'act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code' and amounts to 'coercion' within the meaning of section 15 of the Contract Act, and the document executed in pursuance of the threat is invalid and inoperative.

Per Wallis, C. J.—It is impossible to hold that an act which it is made punishable to abet or attempt is not forbidden by the Penal Code, especially as the absence of any section punishing the act itself is due to the fact that suicide is, in the nature of things, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Though there is no provision in the Indian Penal Code which forbids in terms the commission of suicide, there can be no doubt that the intention of the Legislature is to forbid such an act simply because a man, by committing the act, is beyond the reach of the law.

The word 'prejudice' in section 15 of the Contract Act does not mean mere sentimental prejudice. Some legal injury must flow before a person can be said to be 'prejudiced' under the section.

A wife who executes a document in consequence of the husband's threat that he would commit suicide is prejudicially affected by the threat.

Per Oldfield, J.—Section 15 of the Contract Act should be strictly construed, and the act of prohibition not being expressly forbidden by the Penal Code, the prohibition cannot be inferred from the prohibition of attempts to commit it. An attempt, in the legal sense, can be recognized as such only after the criminal's intention has been frustrated, not when it is expressed, i e., when the threat is made. M CHIKKAM AMMIRAJU v. CHIKKAM SESHAMMA, 32 M. L. J. 494; 5 L. W. 735; 1917 M. W. N. 423 — Ss. 20, 21, 22—Document, execution of—Mistake, nature and effect of, rendering document inoperative.

352

The execution of a document by a person on a mistaken assumption which bears only on the motive which induced the execution, does not amount to 'a mistake as to his rights' which would justify a Court in passing a decree for its cancellation. M AIYAVIER v. SUBRAMANIA IYER, 32 M. L. J. 439; 6 L. W. 22 205

CONTRACT ACT—cont'd.

— S. 23—Promissory note—Pannayal service, in lieu of interest—Public policy—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 68—Bond, suit on—Condition, breach of—Limitation.

The plaintiff lent a certain sum of money to the defendant, on condition that the latter should hand over three of his pannayals to work with plaintiff, that their services should be in lieu of interest on the money lent and that if the pannayals failed to do satisfactory work, the money should become payable. The pannayals left plaintiff's service and the plaintiff more than three years after brought a suit to recover the amount lent with interest.

Held, (1) that the transaction amounted to a transfer of possession of human cattle and was opposed to public policy and the money was, therefore, not recoverable;

(2) that the suit was barred by limitation as it was brought more than three years after the condition of the bond had been broken. M SOARI AYYANGAR v. SUBBARAYAR, 5 L. W. 706 235

— S. 23—Public policy—Agreement to compound criminal case, validity of—Compoundable and non-compoundable offences.

Quære.—Whether an agreement for the compromise of a criminal case is void as being opposed to public policy, where the case was initiated by a complaint alleging compoundable and non-compoundable offences but the Magistrate issued summons only in respect of the compoundable offence C PROBHAT CHANDRA SHOME v. SHASHADHAR KUMAR GHOSE 215

— S. 23—Railway Company, liability of, to compensate consignor—Risk note exonerating Company from liability except for loss of complete package, whether contrary to public policy.

The form of risk-note under which a Railway Company is exonerated from liability to compensate a consignor, except for the loss of a complete package, is not contrary to public policy. C KALI DASS MULLICK v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO., 21 C. W. N. 815

626

— S. 26—Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Divorce—Tafviz—Delegation of power of divorce to wife, validity of 803

— Ss. 38, 45—Payment to one of several joint promisees, whether valid discharge 405

— S. 43, cope .

The real effect of section 43 of the Contract Act, is to deprive a co-contractor sued alone of his right to have his co-contractor joined with him in the action. It enables the plaintiff to get a decree against the one if he does not wish to or will not join the other it does not enable him to file separate actions against both. It does not deprive the second co-contractor of his right to plead the previous judgment, or split up one cause of action into as many causes of action as there are joint contractors. B SHIVLAL MOTILAL v. BIRDICHAND JIVRAJ, 19 Bom. L. R. 370 104

CONTRACT ACT—contd.

— Ss. 45, 38—Payment to one of several joint promisees, whether valid discharge.

A payment to one of several joint promisees does not operate as a complete discharge of the debt.

S JERAMDAS v. WADERO SHAH ALI, O S L R 23

— S. 55—Mortgage of agricultural land—Redemption to be had in khali fast Jeth—Time, whether essence of contract.

In cases of mortgage with possession in respect of agricultural land, providing for redemption only at a particular season of the year known as khali fast Jeth, time is of the essence of the contract, and the mortgagor, in order to maintain a suit for redemption, must show that he made a full offer to redeem in khali fast Jeth and that such offer was refused.

O KARIM BAKHSI v. IDU SHAH, 4 O. L. J. 314

— S. 56—Performance rendered impossible by outbreak of war—Rights and liabilities of parties—Contract of affreightment with alien enemy before war, whether subsists after outbreak of war—C. I. F. contract, incidents of—Executory contract, dissolution of—Estoppel—Vendor and purchaser.

Under a C. I. F. contract the defendants (vendors) sent out an order to Europe for supply of certain goods to the plaintiffs (purchasers) in Calcutta. The goods were shipped on the 2nd July 1914 in a German vessel which was on the high seas when war broke out between England and Germany, and the vessel was captured by the Government as an enemy ship and brought before the Ceylon Court of Admiralty. On the 25th August 1914 the ship was condemned as a lawful prize, but the cargo was released on condition that on its conveyance by the Crown to its destination the Crown would be authorised to recover certain expenses against the cargo released and delivered in Calcutta. On the arrival of the goods in Calcutta, the defendants asked the plaintiffs to take delivery on payment of those expenses. On the plaintiffs' refusal to do so the defendants disposed of the goods in the market, whereupon the plaintiffs instituted a suit for recovery of damages for failure of the defendants to deliver the goods in terms of the contract.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover damages, as the contract between them and the defendants became void under section 56 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as by the outbreak of the war, one essential element of the contract, namely the contract of affreightment, became unlawful and the fact that the defendants at one stage offered to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs on certain terms did not estop them from pleading that the contract had become void under section 56 of the Contract Act.

The incidents of a C. I. F. contract explained.

An executory contract made with an alien enemy in peace time is avoided or dissolved by the outbreak of war, if it enures to the aid of the enemy or if it is in its nature incapable of suspension.

A contract is deemed in its nature incapable of suspension, if its proper performance necessitates intercourse with the enemy during the war, or where time is of the essence of the contract, or the parties cannot, on the restoration of peace be put on a footing of equality.

CONTRACT ACT—contd.

A contract of affreightment may be dissolved without execution not only by act of the parties, but in many cases by the act of the law. If the voyage becomes unlawful or impossible to be performed, or if it is broken up, either before or after it has actually commenced, by war or interdiction, complete or partial, of commerce with the place of destination, the contract is dissolved.

Per Mookerjee, J—Where a ship is condemned as a prize but the cargo is released, the Crown is entitled to impose the payment of freight as a condition of its release and has a lien on the goods till it is paid.

The ultimate conveyance of the goods by the condemned ship to its destination is in no sense a continuation of the original voyage in fulfilment of the contract of affreightment but is essentially a new voyage under new conditions.

C MADHOBAM HURDEODASS v. G. C. SETT, 21 C. W. N. 670; 24 C. L. J. 61

— S. 56, illus. d)

— S. 65, applicability of—Broach and Kaira Incumbered Estates Act (XI of 1881), s. 28—Mortgage by talukdar, validity of—Mortgagee, right of, to recover mortgage money.

Section 65 of the Contract Act has no application to a case of transfer of property by way of mortgage, where the transfer is perfectly valid when made and remains valid for a certain period of time fixed by the law, i. e., the lifetime of the mortgagor.

Therefore, where a mortgage effected by a talukdar becomes void under section 28 of the Broach and Kaira Incumbered Estates Act, 1881, after the death of the talukdar, the mortgagee is not entitled to recover back the money advanced by him on the mortgage.

B PARSHOTTAM VERIBHAI v. CHHATRA-SANGJI MADHAVSANGJI, 19 Bom. L. R. 545; 41 B. 546

— S. 70, scope of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51—Trespasser in good faith, improving land—Owner, liability of, to pay costs of improvement.

The defendant encroached upon the land of the plaintiff, believing in good faith that it belonged to him as forming part of his adjoining land, cleared it of jungle and rendered it fit for cultivation at his expense.

Held, that the defendant was not entitled to a charge upon the land decreed to the plaintiff for the expenses, as it was not established that the plaintiff or his predecessor was aware of the encroachment but as what was done by the defendant for the improvement of the land was done by him lawfully and was not intended to be done gratuitously and as the plaintiff enjoyed the benefit of it, the defendant was entitled, under section 70 of the Contract Act, to be compensated for the money spent by him and the plaintiff should get a decree to recover possession upon payment of the amount which was laid out by the defendant in improving the land of the plaintiff.

Section 70 of the Contract Act is not limited to cases where the person lawfully doing the thing for another person knows who the other person is.

C BHUPENDRA KUMAR v. PYARI MOHAN ROY

— S. 74—Mortgage—Mortgagor, stipulation by, to pay by instalments—Default—Interest, whether penalty.

CONTRACT ACT—contd.

A mortgagor undertook to pay the mortgage-money in instalments and it was agreed that in case of breach of promise the creditors would have the right to realize the instalment money as regards the expired and unexpired period, principal with interest at 2 per cent. per month from the expiration of the kist till realization:

Held, that the stipulation to pay the interest was not by way of penalty. PAT SAHDEO SINGH v. KARIMAN SINGH 770

— S. 74—Penalty—Stipulation to pay interest at higher rate on default of payment of lower rate—Court, power of, to give relief.

A stipulation to pay interest at a higher rate on default of punctual payments of interest at a lower rate is a penalty. But in the converse case, i.e., where the stipulation is for a certain rate of interest which would be reduced to a lower rate, if punctually paid, the stipulation for the higher rate would not be treated as a penalty, although if the question were res integra there is no reason why the stipulation for the higher rate of interest should not be regarded as a penalty in both cases.

Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act does away with the distinction between penalty and liquidated damages, and under the section, as amended by Act VI of 1899, the Court has the power to grant relief if the contract contains any stipulation by way of penalty, even where the contract was entered into before the amendment by Act VI of 1899.

Where a mortgage-deed stipulated for the payment of interest at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to be reduced to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on punctual payment, but the scheme for liquidation of the mortgage debt, which was a material part of the deed, showed that interest was calculated at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. only:

Held, that, as it appeared from the construction of the mortgage deed taken together with the scheme that the intention of the parties was that interest should be paid at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and on default at $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., the mortgagees could not recover interest at more than $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. but that they were entitled to reasonable compensation for non-payment of interest punctually—which compensation would be interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the interest which was not punctually paid. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD. 865

— Ss 78, 56—Effect of s. 78 on concluded C. I. F. contract—War Proclamation of 12th September 1914 (Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance VI of 1914)—Contract, C. I. F., for sale of goods by enemy firm—Declaration of hostilities before delivery of documents, effect of—Impossibility of performance—Non-enforceability of contract—Release of goods, effect of.

The effect of a C. I. F. contract is that the buyer under it is entitled to the documents of title only on payment of the money due on those documents. Until then, he has no right to the goods.

Where the documents of title are made out to the order of the shippers vendors, the buyer does not acquire any right to the goods before he obtains the documents of title in exchange for payment and a contract of that description is not overridden by section 78 of the Contract Act which expressly reserves from its operation any special contract which the parties may enter into and impliedly accept the ordinary incidents attached to it by mercantile usage.

CONTRACT ACT—contd.

A buyer who had contracted for the supply of goods by an enemy firm before the commencement of hostilities under a C. I. F. contract cannot enforce its performance if, before delivery of documents to him, war had been declared. The contract had become impossible of performance and void by the combined operation of section 56 of the Contract Act and the Proclamation of 12th September 1914.

The fact that the goods were released by Government after having been temporarily detained will not have the effect of reviving the contract or renewing the validity of the contract which had become void before the order of release was passed. Its only effect is that the Government withdraws its hands so that any party entitled to the goods may establish his right to them. M SOORTHINGJEE SAKALCHAND v. MAHOMED NASURUDEEN, 32 M. L. J. 146 526

— Ss 102, 108, 178—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 137—Contract—Negotiability—Delivery order, whether negotiable Document of title—Test 86

— S. 128 347

— Ss 178, 79—Bailment—Pledgor and pledgee, rights of—Pledge by person in possession of goods having limited authority—Principal, knowledge of.

Section 79 of the Contract Act does not limit the scope of section 78, but saves a pledge to the extent of the pledgor's own interest, notwithstanding the presence of invalidating conditions falling under one of the provisos to section 178. In other words, whenever he has an interest the person in possession of the goods or documents has unconditional authority to charge at least that interest.

Plaintiffs, up-country cotton merchants, used to consign their cotton for sale to A and frequently called upon the latter to remit large sums of money, the security being the cotton in A's hands. A used to raise this money by pledge of the cotton to B. Subsequently A became an insolvent, and the accounts between the parties showed a balance of Rs. 50,000 owing to A from the plaintiffs and Rs. 82,000 borrowed by A from B on the security of 757 bales of cotton. In a suit by plaintiffs to recover the cotton from B:

Held, that the plaintiffs were liable to pay B the money advanced by him to A on the security of the cotton, inasmuch as the plaintiffs knew the manner in which their cotton was being dealt with by A and consequently approved of the pledging and had urged A to pledge the cotton, when necessary. B LAKHAMSEY LADHA & CO. v. LAKHMICHAND PADAMSEY, 19 Bom. L. R. 335 148

— S. 211—Principal and agent—Agent for sale of goods—Delivery order received from broker—Payment to broker, whether discharges agent.

A delivery order for certain goods belonging to the plaintiffs' firm was handed over to the defendants, for the purpose of enabling them to sell the goods at a commission, by a broker who, in the defendants' presence, endorsed the name of the plaintiffs' firm on the order. The defendants sold the goods and paid the price to the broker:

CONTRACT ACT—concl'd.

Held, that in the absence of a custom of the trade warranting the defendants to pay the price of the goods to the broker, or of proof that the plaintiffs had expressly or impliedly authorised the broker to receive payment, the defendants were not discharged from their liability to the plaintiffs for the price of the goods. C HARIBANGSA SHIBDAS RAKSHIT v. NALINI MOHAN SHAHA 799

— S. 233—Principal and agent—Agent personally liable—Principal, undisclosed—Suit against agent—Suit, subsequent, against principal, whether maintainable.

A plaintiff who has a right to sue both an agent and his principal under section 233 of the Contract Act is not competent, after he has sued one of them to judgment, to sue the other in a second suit.

Section 233 of the Contract Act enacts substantive law, laying down who shall be held liable, and not adjective law, defining the procedure by which the liability may be enforced. This section merely creates a joint liability so that judgment may be obtained against both principal and agent.

The illustration to section 233 shows that the words "hold them both liable" mean that the party dealing with the agent can join both the agent and the principal in one suit, and there is no suggestion that if he does so he is only entitled to a decree against one or the other and not against both.

Section 233 of the Contract Act gives the party dealing with an agent who is personally liable a double form of election. He can choose between suing both principal and agent jointly or electing to sue one of them. So that in any case if he sues one to judgment a suit against the other will be barred. But if he sues both and one consents to judgment that cannot be a bar to his continuing the suit against the other. B SHIVLAL MOTILAL v. BIRDI-CHAND JIVRAJ, 19 Bom. L. R. 370 194

CONTRACT, C. I. P., meaning and scope of—Mercantile usage 526

COSTS awarded against nominal party put forward by real party, whether can be recovered from real party—Inherent power to award costs—Appellate Insolvency Jurisdiction of High Court.

Proceedings for the adjudication of the petitioners in insolvency, instituted in the Original Side of High Court by certain persons in the name of a lady, were dismissed with costs against the lady by an order of the Court, and an appeal against the order preferred in the name of the lady was also dismissed with costs by the Appellate Court:

Held, on a substantive application of the petitioners to the Appellate Court that the real people who put forward the lady to institute the proceedings for the adjudication in insolvency should be made to pay the costs of the proceedings awarded against the lady and taxed by the Taxing Officer, although those persons were not present when the taxation of costs took place on notice to the lady, and although one of them did not live or carry on business within the limits of the Original Side of the High Court. C KETOKEY CHARAN BANERJEE v. SARAT KUMARI DEBI, 21 C. W. N. 826; 26 C. L. J. 44 000

COSTS—concl'd.

—Tender of rent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38.

Ordinarily a litigant who succeeds on his claim, although he may be deprived of his costs for some reason, cannot be ordered to pay the costs of the other side. But in a case where the tenant defendant having tendered the rent due made an offer of performance under section 38 of the Contract Act before a suit was instituted for its recovery, the Court which decrees the suit has jurisdiction to direct that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs in the suit. C BHUPENDRA KUMAR SARKAR v. KISSORI DASI 614

COURT FEES ACT (VII of 1870), S. 7, CL. (IV)—Mesne profits, valuation of, claim for—Court-fee, amount of.

A claim for mesne profits is not a claim the value of which cannot be ascertained. The plaintiff in such a case must, therefore, put a valuation on his claim and pay ad valorem Court-fee thereon. He cannot recover anything in excess of the valuation thus put by him.

Per Roe, J.—Even if a claim for mesne profits is to be regarded as a claim for accounts, section 7, clause (IV), of the Court Fees Act is pre-emptory that such suit shall be approximately valued. PAT NAND KUMAR SINGH v. BILAS RAM MARWARI, 1 P. L. W. 781 579

S. 7, CL. 4 (c)—Suit to declare deed not binding on person not party to it—Valuation—Court-fee.

The plaintiff in a suit to declare that a deed is not binding on a person not a party to it and for consequential relief is entitled to value the reliefs as he likes and pay the Court-fee on such valuation.

Such a suit is not in substance a suit to obtain the cancellation of the deed. M RAMASAMI NADAN v. SUBRAMANIA NADAN, 32 M. L. J. 447 620 — Ss. 19 (H) (4), 19 (I)—Motion of Collector, delay in, effect of—Probate, grant of, delay in.

The grant of Probate to a petitioner, who has filed the valuation required by section 19 (I) of the Court Fees Act and has also paid the Court-fee requisite under that section, cannot be delayed on account of the Collector's omission in making a motion under section 19 (H), sub-section (4), of the Court Fees Act. C SRIMATI PRASANNA MOYEE BASU, In re 576

SCH. II, ART. 17, CL. (iii), S. 7, SUB-S. 4, CL. (c) 96

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (ACT V of 1898)—S. 4 (1) (h)—Complaint, what is 289

— S. 15—Bench of Honorary Magistrates—Trial by two out of three, legality of—Proceedings, part of, before three, but decision by two, effect of.

A case was opened before a Bench of three duly appointed Honorary Magistrates, but one of them left at an early stage of the proceedings and took no further part in the proceedings. The other two Magistrates heard the whole of the case and one of them wrote the judgment but did not sign it, although he initialled certain corrections in the text. The third signed it:

Held, (1) that in the absence of a special order in the case, or applicable to all cases of the class to which the case belonged, requiring as a matter of law

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

three persons to hear and decide it, the hearing and decision by two Magistrates was in accordance with law;

2 that the mere fact that three or any other number of Magistrates happened to be present during any part of the hearing did not invalidate the trial of the case by two Magistrates. A KHUDA BAKSH v. EMPEROR, 15 A. L. J. 463; 18 Cr. L. J. 749 749

— S. 54, scope of—Cognisable cases—Police, power of, to arrest when warrant already issued by Magistrate.

Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not prevent any Police Officer from arresting a person where a warrant for his arrest has already been issued by a Magistrate, and the exercise of the power is not restricted only to the officer to whom the warrant is directed.

Per Napier, J—The object of the Code is to give the widest powers to the Police in cognisable cases and the only limitation is the necessary requirement of reasonability and credibility of the information to prevent the misuse of the powers. M RATNA MUDALI, In re, 18 Cr. L. J. 709 709 — Ss. 54 (1), 537—Arrest without warrant—Arrest without notifying substance of warrant—Omission, effect of.

The omission to notify the person arrested of the order for his arrest is an irregularity covered by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The writing out of a warrant or an order for arrest when the person to be arrested comes within the first clause of section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a superfluous act but cannot be considered illegal. A RANGPAL v. EMPEROR, 18 Cr. L. J. 666 314

— S. 72, scope of—Summons to give evidence at Police investigation, disobedience to—Service not effected through departmental superior, effect of—Offence—Penal Code Act XLV of 1860, s. 174.

Section 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requiring service of summonses to Government and Railway servants to be effected through the heads of their departments applies only to summonses issued by a Court of Justice, and not to orders of Police Officers investigating a crime under Chapter XIV of the Code.

Non-attendance, therefore, in obedience to a summons issued by a Sub-Inspector of Police and served personally on an amin requiring him to give evidence at a Police investigation constitutes an offence under section 74, Indian Penal Code.

The matter, however, is one to be departmentally dealt with. The practice of launching a prosecution without consultation with the delinquent's official superior deprecated. M GUMPARTHI VENKATARAMIAH, In re, 18 Cr. L. J. 733 733

— Ss. 110, 367—Evidence—Appellate Court, duty of—Judgment, nature of—Findings to be supported by reasons—Evidence, examination of 297

— S. 110—Evidence as to suspicion, value of—Ex-convict, position of—Locus penitentiae.

Where a person bound over to be of good behaviour, under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, was, shortly after his release, handed up again under the same section, and the evidence against him consisted of the suggestion that he had been suspected of having been concerned in two or three thefts:

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

Held, that in the absence of any tangible evidence to show that he had since his release been leading a life of crime and in view of the short period which he had had to reform himself, he could not be bound over again. O AKBARA v. EMPEROR, 4 O. L. J. 319; 18 Cr. L. J. 710 710

— S. 110 (d)—Extortion and mischief—Habitually bringing false claims in Civil Courts—Offence.

Section 110 (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to the case of a person who has the reputation of habitually bringing false claims in the Civil Courts.

A person who brings a claim in the Civil Court which he knows to be false, commits an offence punishable under section 209 of the Penal Code, but he does not by so doing commit an offence either, if he succeeds, of extortion, or if he fails, of attempting to commit extortion. O KHUSHAL v. EMPEROR, 4 O. L. J. 143; 20 O. C. 129; 18 Cr. L. J. 651 299

— S. 137, proceedings under—Magistrate, whether can act as arbitrator—Claim of right, bona fides of.

Section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code is imperative and mandatory.

In proceeding under that section a Magistrate is not justified in assuming the role of an arbitrator, simply because both the parties agree to his acting as such. Consent or waiver of the parties cannot invest a Magistrate with jurisdiction which he does not possess.

Where in a proceeding under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a party appears and shows cause, alleging that what is claimed as a public pathway is not so, the Magistrate should record evidence on the matter of the complaint as in a summons case, and should at the outset enquire into the bona fides or speciosity of the claim. C CHANDRA MANDAL v. RAM MANDAL, 25 C. L. J. 349; 21 C. W. N. 926; 18 Cr. L. J. 738 738

— S. 145—Arbitration—Magistrate, whether can make reference—Jurisdiction.

A Magistrate, acting under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, has no jurisdiction even with the parties' consent to refer the dispute to arbitration, and to make an order in regard to the possession of the parties upon the award of the arbitrators. PAT HARI PRASAD TEWARI v. SEWAK DAS, 1 P. L. W. 748; (1917) PAT. 251; 18 Cr. L. J. 685 333

— S. 145—Crops, dispute as to—Jurisdiction—Attachment.

The right to make collections or to appropriate the crops or produce of a village or shares in a village comes within the purview of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to pass an order restraining the disputing parties from interfering with the crops stored in the threshing floor or to attach such property. PAT PUNIT MAHTON v. SIRAJ-ULHAQ, 2 P. L. W. 67; 18 Cr. L. J. 652 300

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

— S. 145—Proceedings, object of—Portion of property made subject-matter of dispute—Mistake in law—Non-joinder of party—Order giving party more than his claim, validity of—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The purpose of a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is merely to prevent a breach of the peace and if the Magistrate thinks that it is sufficient to prevent a breach of the peace to include in his proceeding only a portion of the land which is the subject of the Police report there is nothing to prevent him doing so. The rule that if a suit is brought only in respect of a portion of the land claimed a subsequent suit for the remainder might be barred is not applicable to proceedings under this section.

A mistake of law is not a ground upon which the High Court can interfere with proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, unless the mistake goes to the jurisdiction.

Failure to add a party interested in the land in dispute as a party to the proceedings under section 145 is not a ground for interference by the High Court.

A Magistrate goes beyond his jurisdiction if by an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code he awards to a party more than that party has claimed, and in such a case the High Court will interfere with the order. PAT MUKHAL SINGH v. RAMSARUP SINGH, 18 Cr. L. J. 692 692

— S. 145, proceedings under—Symbolical possession of subject-matter delivered to party some time before proceedings—Evidence of actual possession on date of proceedings, whether can be discarded.

Where symbolical possession of a holding was delivered to a party on the 2nd June 1915 and proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of the same holding were instituted in November 1916:

Held, that it was incumbent on the Magistrate to go into the question of actual possession between those two dates and consider the evidence tendered by the parties on that question before he could properly pass a final order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code and that it was not competent to him to wholly discard and leave out of consideration the evidence of actual possession on the date on which the proceedings were instituted. C HAZANI KHAN v. NAJIB CHANDRA PAL, 18 Cr. L. J. 718 718

— S. 145, scope of—Order of ejectment, whether competent—Magistrate, whether can decide claims to hold possession and reap crops—Irregularity—Jurisdiction—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The scope of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is merely a determination of actual possession for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace pending a decision on the merits in a civil dispute.

The section does not provide for eviction by the Magistrate or for a decision by him of any claims to a right to hold possession or to reap crops.

Clause (1) of section 145 is imperative with regard to the necessity of serving an order in writing on the parties. The mere omission to record such an order gives the Chief Court power to interfere in revision.

CRIMINAL PROCEEDURE CODE—contd.

Where the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code are irregular and the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction, the Chief Court can interfere in revision.

Where the lands in question were attached to a dara and there being two rival claimants to the mahantship, each claiming to be in possession through his tenants, the Magistrate passed an order directing the men of one of the parties to leave at once and not to re-enter or interfere with the crops under penalty of a prosecution under section 168, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the order was bad inasmuch as the Magistrate had neglected to come to any clear finding on the one point on which a decision was really necessary, the date of forcible possession, and had passed orders for which the section gave no authority whatever.

It is not sufficient for a Magistrate to come to a general finding that certain fields are in the possession of one party and certain others in the possession of the other and that the latter has taken wrongful and forcible possession. The date of such forcible possession must be determined and unless there is a finding that the forcible possession occurred in the case of all the fields at the same time, there must be a finding as to the date of possession with regard to each field separately. P KAKU v. HARNAMAN, 18 Cr. L. J. 660; 28 P. W. R. 1917 Cr.; 40 P. R. 1917 Cr. 308

— S. 145 (6)—“Due course of law,” meaning of.

The phrase “due course of law” in section 145 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code does not necessarily mean a decree of a Civil Court, but an order which evicts a party must either be an order of a Civil Court or of a Court acting under statutory authority. In the latter case, there must be a clear indication, express or implied in the terms of the Statute itself, to show that the order has the effect of a decree. PAT KRISHNA DEYAL GIR v. NIRMALI, 1 P. L. W. 642; 18 Cr. L. J. 582 30

— Ss. 147, 148, 537—“Local enquiry,” meaning of—Evidence, recording of, by Magistrate deputed to make enquiry, legality of—Order on report and evidence—Jurisdiction—Waiver of objections, effect of—High Court—Revision, grounds for—Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61), s. 107—Letters Patent (Mad.), s. 15.

Per Curiam.—The High Court does not interfere, under section 15 of the Charter Act, with orders passed by a Magistrate under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, unless such orders were passed without jurisdiction.

The words “local enquiry” in section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, are not synonymous with mere local inspection, and a person deputed to make an enquiry under the section is competent to examine witnesses.

Per Ayling, J.—Whatever may be the scope of the enquiry contemplated by section 148, the Magistrate delegating the enquiry to a Subordinate Magistrate is not absolved, on receipt of the latter's report from the duty imposed on him by section 145 (4) of receiving any evidence produced before him by the parties and taking any further evidence he may find necessary.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

Where a first class Magistrate acts on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who was deputed to make the enquiry without objection by the parties and bases his order thereon, the order is not one passed without jurisdiction and the High Court cannot interfere with it in revision.

Quære.—Whether such an order would amount to a defect of jurisdiction where the first class Magistrate refuses to take evidence tendered before him.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Where a first class Magistrate acts upon evidence taken by a Subordinate Magistrate the former must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction, but the defect is cured by section 537 where the parties do not object to the procedure and are not prejudiced thereby. M MUTHUSWAMI NADAN v. KALIANGA MOOPAN, 33 M. L. J. 78; 18 CR. L. J. 715 715

— S. 164—Confession—Recording of confession by Magistrate—Magistrate, power of, to put questions—Inspection of scene of occurrence by Judge accompanied by confessing accused—Additional statements made by confessing accused and recorded by Judge, admissibility of.

Though the law does not contemplate or authorise inquisitorial procedure by a Magistrate who is called upon to record a confession under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he is not forbidden to ask questions to satisfy himself that the statement proposed to be made is voluntary or for the purpose of making clear and intelligible any particular passage of a statement made to him.

A Magistrate not trying a case can only record the confession of an accused person if voluntarily made under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is not permissible for him to question the accused closely and at great length for the purpose of extracting statements to be afterwards used as evidence.

The statement of an accused elicited by the Magistrate in this way is not admissible in evidence.

In a case while the trial of several accused, one of whom had made a confession, was in progress, the Sessions Judge went himself to the scene of the crime accompanied by the assessors and the confessing accused, who showed him over the ground and made certain additional statements by way of comment or illustration of his confession, and the Judge made note of them:

Held, that the Judge was wrong in allowing the accused to make these additional statements which ought not to have been regarded. O KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR, 20 O. C. 136; 18 CR. L. J. 742 742

— S. 164 (3)—Confession, how to be made—Magistrate, duty of, when recording confession.

Under section 164 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, no Magistrate should record any confession unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it is made voluntarily. What is meant by the Code is that the Magistrate should ask the accused some such question as "Why are you confessing? Are you sorry for your crime or is it that some one has told you that you will gain something by a confession?" and should refuse to proceed with the recording of the confession until he has had a satisfactory answer to his question. PAT R. GHOLAYA v. EMPEROR, 18 CR. L. J. 721 721

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

— S. 181 (2)—Property subject of offence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 406—Criminal breach of trust—Jurisdiction.

Where accused was entrusted with a railway receipt for goods in one district with instructions to take delivery of the goods at their destination in another district and sell them on complainant's account and accused did so sell them and misappropriated the sale proceeds:

Held, (1) that the offence was triable within the jurisdiction of the Court where the goods were sold and the money was received and misappropriated;

(2) that the property which was the subject of the offence in the case was not the railway receipt but the money received on sale of the goods. L B P. L. T. A. KASI CHETTY v. V. V. KASI CHETTY, 10 BUR. L. T. 50; 18 CR. L. J. 645 293

— S. 190 (1) (a) 289

— Ss. 195, 476—Prosecution of complainant—Sanction, form of—Court, duty of 328

— S. 195 (7)—Sanction for prosecution of witness during pendency of suit, propriety of—District Judge, whether can revoke sanction granted by Subordinate Judge.

Sanction for the prosecution of a witness for deposing falsely in a suit which is still pending is improper, particularly when the witness is a near relative and am mukhtiar of the plaintiff, a lady who depends upon him for the proper prosecution of her suit.

Generally speaking, it is not desirable that witnesses should be prosecuted while the case in which they have deposed or are about to depose is still pending.

On a petition to the High Court for the revocation of a sanction for prosecution granted by a Subordinate Judge, the High Court having formed a firm opinion as to the impropriety of the sanction, set it aside, though it felt that the proper course for the petitioner should have been to apply to the District Judge under section 195 (7) of the Criminal Procedure Code. C RAJ KUMAR DEOTY v. SATISH CHANDRA GHOSH, 21 C. W. N. 753; 18 CR. L. J. 735 735

— S. 200 289

— Ss. 234, 235—Charges, misjoinder of—Trial, legality of—Offences of same kind—Forgery and giving false evidence—"Same transaction," meaning of.

Where an accused was charged at one trial with four offences, viz., of having abetted an unknown person to fix a false thumb impression purporting it to be of someone else on a summons issued by a Civil Court, and of swearing false affidavits in regard to such service on different dates:

Held, that the offences being more than three and being neither of the same kind, nor committed in the course of the same transaction, there was a misjoinder of charges in contravention of the provisions of sections 234 and 235, Criminal Procedure Code, and that consequently the proceedings were illegal and should be quashed.

The expression "same transaction" in section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to cases in which the offences are separated by distinct intervals of time or place and which require to be proved by distinct evidence. S GERIMAL v. EMPEROR, 10 S. L. R. 192; 18 Cr. L. J. 664 312

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

— S. 235 (1)—Joint trial for distinct offences against different persons committed at different times, whether legal—"Same transaction," meaning of.

The trial of several accused in respect of several distinct offences committed at different times and at different places against different persons is illegal. The fact that the complaints were lodged on the same day or that the motive for the commission of the offences was the same in all the occurrences does not at all go to show that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. PAT GHASI RAM v. SIKRA URAON, 18 Cr. L. J. 739 739

— S. 239—Several tenants holding separate lands of same landlord charged with mischief, whether can be tried together.

Where five tenants who act in concert are charged with the offence of mischief, committed in respect of different plots in their respective possessions they can be jointly tried under section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code. PAT EMPEROR v. LALU GOPE, 1 P. L. W. 691; 18 Cr. L. J. 687 335

— S. 253—Discharge, effect of—District Magistrate, power of, to hold or direct further inquiry

Where an accused is discharged by a Magistrate under section 255 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the District Magistrate has jurisdiction to hold a further inquiry himself or to direct a further inquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate. A PARBHU LAL v. JANKI, 18 Cr. L. J. 706 706

— S. 271.

Section 271 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though it directs that a plea of guilty shall be recorded, does not direct that the accused shall be convicted thereon but only that he may be so convicted, that is to say, it is left to the discretion of the presiding Judge in each particular case to determine whether in spite of the plea it is or is not desirable to enter upon the evidence. B LAXMYA SHIDDAPPA v. EMPEROR, 19 Bom. L. R. 356; 18 Cr. L. J. 699 699

— Ss. 271, 164—Joint trial of several accused—Plea of guilty entered by one of accused—Procedure.

The trial of an accused does not necessarily come to an end as soon as he offers a plea of guilty, and where a Judge does not convict on such a plea the only other course open to him is to proceed with the trial of the accused.

When a plea of guilty is entered by one of several co-accused who are to be tried jointly, a Judge has, under section 271 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a discretion to decide either that the accused be convicted on such plea or that he should be put on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty. The proper procedure to follow in such cases is that if the Judge convicts the accused on his plea of guilty, he should be removed from the dock, in which case he can be called as a witness against the other accused; or the Judge should put it on record that he decides to put accused on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

The Judge is bound to read and explain the charge to the accused and he ought to satisfy himself by interrogation of the accused, if necessary, that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes in making a plea of guilty. Having done so, the Judge is then in a position to exercise properly the discretion which the law allows and to put upon record the reasons which guide his discretion. The course which it is intended to pursue should not be left in doubt.

It is, however, not illegal for the Court to proceed with the trial of an accused who has pleaded guilty without previously placing upon record its reasons for doing so. O KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR, 20 O. C. 136; 18 Cr. L. J. 742 742

— S. 288—Evidence transferred to Sessions record, value of—Conviction—Confession, retracted—Corroboration.

Evidence brought on to the Sessions record, under section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, must be treated as substantive evidence and there is nothing illegal in basing a conviction on such evidence, but it would not be safe to do so without any other evidence to support it, and no responsible tribunal would permit the conviction of a person upon such evidence if it stood by itself.

Such evidence cannot be accepted as proper corroboration of a confession made to a Magistrate and subsequently retracted. P PIRTHI v. EMPEROR, 19 P. W. R. 1917 Cr.; 18 Cr. L. J. 703; 37 P. R. 1917 Cr. 703

— S. 345 (1)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 323—Compounding of offence—Compromise, who can 729

— S. 367—Appellate Court, Criminal—Judgment, contents of 689

— Ss. 367, 424—Appellate Court, judgment of, contents of—Finding, definite, necessity of 698

— Ss. 367, 110—Evidence Appellate Court, duty of Judgment, nature of—Findings to be supported by reasons—Evidence, examination of.

It is the duty of an Appellate Criminal Court to show by its judgment that it has duly weighed and examined the evidence against the accused, has appreciated the points both for and against him, and has brought a judicial mind to bear upon the case. Its findings must be supported by reasons, however brief they may be.

Where the judgment of a District Magistrate was, "It is obvious that if one quarter of the evidence for the prosecution is true, and I see no reason to doubt that it is, the appellant is a most proper person to be bound over under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code."

Held, that it was no judgment at all and could not stand. O BANSI DHAR v. EMPEROR, 4 O. L. J. 141; 18 Cr. L. J. 649 297

— S. 403 (4)—Acquittal by second class Magistrate Offence, different, constituted by same facts—Subsequent charge before first class Magistrate—Previous acquittal, whether operates as bar Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 406, 409.

The accused was charged under section 406 of the Penal Code and was tried and acquitted by a Magistrate with second class powers. He was subsequently charged on the same facts under section 400 and was brought before a Magistrate with first class powers to take his trial:

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

Held, that the subsequent charge being with relation to an offence which the first Magistrate could not try, vide section 403 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code, the previous order of acquittal with respect to the minor offence for which the accused had already been tried was no bar to the subsequent proceedings. M VENKATARANGA JOSIAR, In re, 18 CR. L. J. 643 291

— S. 424—Appeal, criminal—Judgment, contents of—Possession, determination of factum of—Court, duty of.

The judgment of a Court of Criminal Appeal must show on its face that the Court has considered the facts and evidence in reasonable detail.

A person in possession of land has a right to protect his possession by show and use of reasonable force against trespassers and wrongdoers.

Where the factum of possession is the determining element in a case, a Magistrate must find which of the parties was in peaceable possession on the date of the offence and was trying to protect such possession, and which party was trying to acquire possession by use of force. M VEERAPPA NAICK, In re, 18 CR. L. J. 752 752 — Ss. 424, 367—Appellate Court, Criminal—Judgment, contents of.

The judgment of a Criminal Appellate Court must show that the Court has fully considered the evidence on both sides and the pleas raised in appeal and that its conclusions are well supported by reasons. O BENI v. EMPEROR, 4 O. L. J. 80; 18 CR. L. J. 689 689

— Ss. 424, 367—Appellate Court, judgment of, contents of—Finding, definite, necessity of.

A Court of Appeal dismissed a criminal appeal with the observation that the evidence for the prosecution was, on the whole, slightly stronger and that the story of the prosecution as regards probability was far more likely than the story set up by the defence:

Held, that the opinion expressed by the Court was not sufficient for a conviction in a criminal case and that unless the Court could come to some more definite opinion regarding the guilt of the accused, the latter ought to be acquitted. C KOBBAI ALI v. EMPEROR, 21 C. W. N. 550; 18 CR. L. J. 698 698

— S. 424—Judgment of Appellate Court, rules to be observed in writing.

Section 424 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that a judgment, whether it be under section 421 or under section 423, should be written by an Appellate Court in accordance with the rules laid down in Chapter XVI, including section 367 of the Code, for the recording of a judgment.

When the order of an Appellate Court is liable to revision by the High Court, the former Court should give some reason for dismissing an appeal to show that the points raised in the appeal were properly considered by it. PAT TALEBAR v. EMPEROR, 2 P. L. W. 49; 18 CR. L. J. 750 750

— S. 437—Discharge of accused District Magistrate, power of, to order further enquiry, limits of.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

A District Magistrate should not exercise his powers under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code promiscuously, whenever he forms a different estimate of the witnesses, whom he has not seen from that which was formed by the Magistrate who did see them.

A District Magistrate should not order a further enquiry merely upon the strength of his own appreciation of the evidence in a case where the accused has had a perfectly fair trial reaching a lawful conclusion, and the Trial Magistrate's discussion of the evidence has been apparently quite reasonable.

B NARAINAH VENKATESH, In re, 19 Bom. L. R. 350; 18 CR. L. J. 646 294

S. 439—Acquittal, petition against—Revision

—High Court, power of interference of—Jurisdiction.

A High Court has jurisdiction to interfere on revision with an acquittal, but it should exercise this jurisdiction sparingly, and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

By a long established practice of the Bombay High Court, revisional applications against orders of acquittal are not entertained from private petitioners except on some very broad ground of the exceptional requirements of public justice. B FAREDOON COWASJI PARBHU, In re, 19 Bom. L. R. 354; 18 CR. L. J. 668; 41 B. 560 316

— S. 439—Acquittal, setting aside of—Revision—Mistake of law as to accused's right to property—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Theft—Bona fide claim of right—Execution—Land delivered to decree-holder in execution of decree—Crops growing, whether pass.

Where, in execution of a decree in a title suit, possession of land is given to the decree-holder the growing crops pass with the land.

The accused, having cut and removed paddy from a land of which possession had been delivered to the complainant in execution of a decree in a title suit, was prosecuted for theft, but was acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that he had grown the paddy prior to the delivery of possession:

Held, (1) that the case had not been properly tried and, therefore, the order of acquittal could not stand;

(2) that the case should be re-tried but that the accused should not be convicted of theft if it was proved that though he may have made a mistake as to his rights under the law, he was acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right. C UDAI NARAIN GAIN v. RAMANATH MIDDA, 18 CR. L. J. 732 732

— S. 439—Appealable and non-appealable sentences—Appeal—Conviction set aside Sessions Judge, duty of—Revision—High Court, power of.

If at one and the same trial an appealable sentence is passed against one or more accused and non-appealable sentences are passed against others and the Sessions Judge, hearing the case on the merits on the appeals of those convicts who had a right of appeal, comes to the conclusion that the convictions are bad as against all the accused persons, he should consider it his duty to refer to the High Court the case of those persons against whom non-appealable sentences were passed, and the matter should then be dealt with by the High Court under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. A BHOLA v. EMPEROR, 15 A. L. J. 574; 18 CR. L. J. 684 332

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

— S. 439—Penal Code Act XLV of 1860), s. 323 Conviction Loss of record, whether ground for acquittal Sentence, petty Re-trial, whether can be ordered.

Petitioner was convicted under section 323 of the Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. He moved the Sessions Judge to exercise his revisional powers and to refer the case to the High Court. It was discovered that the record of the case was lost, so that the Sessions Judge could obtain no materials upon which to make his reference. He, therefore, asked the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentence and to order a re-trial.

Held, that the loss of the record after conviction was no ground for the acquittal of the accused and that the sentence being a petty one no re-trial could be ordered. PAT SHEO JHAWAN PANDA v. RAM SAKHI KUARI, 18 CR. L. J. 737 737

— S. 439—Revision—Enhancement of sentence—High Court, interference by.

The enhancement of a sentence by the High Court, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is a serious proceeding. The High Court should not ordinarily interfere where a substantial sentence has been passed by the Trying Court and will be always slow to interfere, unless the sentence passed is manifestly inadequate. S EMPEROR v. PARO, 10 S. L. R. 207; 18 CR. L. J. 708 708

— Ss. 476, 195—Prosecution of complainant—Sanction, form of—Court, duty of.

Where the prosecution of a complainant is justifiable in the general public interest, it should be carefully guarded against becoming a means of oppression or revenge in the hands of individuals.

Therefore, under such circumstances an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is more appropriate than an order for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Per Walsh, J.—The absence of an authority whose duty it is to decide upon and undertake prosecutions under section 211 is a flaw in the criminal procedure in this country.

There is no higher duty laid upon a Court of Law than that of strict enforcement of a strict adherence to truth.

Per Piggott, J.—Where one of two Judges constituting a Bench is clearly of opinion that the case under consideration is a proper one for the institution of further proceedings, it would be improper for his colleague to refuse to concur. A HANSRAJ SINGH v. BHAGWANA, 18 CR. L. J. 680 328

— S. 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193 Sanction to prosecute—False statement—Materials arising out of cross-examination, whether sufficient.

An order directing a prosecution for perjury merely upon materials arising out of cross-examination is a very unsafe proceeding, especially where the cross-examination has been protracted. PAT RAKTOO RAI v. EMPEROR, 2 P. L. W. 99; 18 CR. L. J. 727 727

— S. 488 (9)—Complaint—Husband complained against living temporarily in Calcutta—Jurisdiction of Calcutta Courts.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—contd.

Respondent who lived in Darjeeling came to Calcutta where he resided from the 16th to 23rd January. While he was residing in Calcutta an application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, was made by his wife to the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta:

Held, that the residence of the husband in Calcutta from the 6th to the 23rd January, when the application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, was made, was sufficient to give the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta jurisdiction, having regard to sub-section 9 of section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. C JOLLY v. JOLLY, 21 C. W. N. 872; 18 CR. L. J. 706 706 — Ss. 497, (1), 498—Bail—High Court, power of.

The power of a High Court to direct admission to bail under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code is unfettered and in no way limited by the provisions of section 497 (1) of the Code; but the High Court will not grant bail in non-bailable offences except when special circumstances are disclosed. S HARCHAND JHAMATMAL v. EMPEROR, 10 S. L. R. 208; 18 CR. L. J. 642 290

— S. 526—Refusal to allow accused to cross-examine complainant—Transfer.

An application for transfer of a case was made on the ground that the accused had not been allowed to properly cross-examine the complainant and that certain orders and remarks recorded by the Magistrate clearly indicated that he had formed a strong opinion against the petitioner. It appeared that the Magistrate considered that the accused should be allowed to inspect certain bank books before cross-examining the complainant and the bank having objected to allowing the necessary inspection, the Magistrate passed an order on the 18th July 1916 directing the bank to give the accused's Counsel opportunity to inspect the necessary registers. On the 4th of August, however, in the absence of the accused's Counsel and without any reference to the previous order relating to the registers, the evidence of the complainant was closed. The complainant was then summoned as a witness by the defence but when Counsel wished to cross-examine him his request was refused:

Held, (1) that although the Magistrate's refusal may have been strictly legal, it was improper in the circumstances of the case and the Magistrate would have been well advised to have allowed at any rate a reasonable amount of cross-examination, especially when the prosecution raised no objection to such cross-examination;

(2) that inasmuch as the case had reached a very advanced stage, the charge having been framed and a certain amount of the defence evidence having been recorded, it could not be transferred but that the Magistrate should allow the accused to cross-examine the complainant after giving him an opportunity of examining the bank registers. P SUJAN SINGH, v. JIA LAL, 18 CR. L. J. 690; 29 P. W. R. 1917 CR. 690

— S. 526—Transfer of case—Altercation between Judge and Counsel, whether ground for transfer.

It is for the High Court, exercising its jurisdiction under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to transfer a case from one Court to another, to satisfy itself that on the facts disclosed there is a reasonable apprehension that the accused may be prejudiced and not have a fair trial.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE—concl.

A quarrel or unpleasantness between the Judge and the Counsel for the accused is no ground for the transfer of a case under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code. PAT NIBARAN CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. EMPEROR, (1917) PAT 230; 2 P. L. W. 83; 18 CR. L. J. 670 318

——— S. 526—Transfer of case—Apprehension, reasonable.

To justify an order of transfer under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the apprehension of not receiving a fair and impartial trial must be a reasonable apprehension in the opinion of the Court, and not such as would merely appear reasonable to the accused. S. WALI MAHOMED v. EMPEROR, 10 S. L. R. 183; 18 CR. L. J. 644 292

——— S. 526—Transfer of case, grounds for—Reasonable apprehension.

Where an accused person has a reasonable apprehension that he will not be fairly treated by the Magistrate his case should be transferred, but the apprehension must be a real and reasonable one.

The sole question to be considered is whether the facts disclosed in the application for transfer give rise to a reasonable inference that the Magistrate who is seised of the case may be wittingly or unwittingly prejudiced against the accused. P. ALIQU-ULLAH v. EMPEROR, 13 P. W. R. 1917 CR.; 18 CR. L. J. 719 719

——— S. 537 715

CROSS-EXAMINATION—Court, interference by.

It is for the Judge, when he sees that a Counsel is harassing or browbeating a witness unduly or trying to suppress his answers, to intervene and protect the witness in the interest of justice. PAT NIBARAN CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. EMPEROR. (1917) PAT. 230; 2 P. L. W. 83; 18 CR. L. J. 670 318

CROWN GRANTS ACT (XV OF 1895), Ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, applicability of—"Successor," meaning of 69

——— Ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, effect of grant of, in cases of estates entered in lists IV and VI—Sanad, supersession of, under Oudh Estates Act—Ordinary law, whether includes sanad under section 23—Revival under Crown Grants Act of sanad already superseded 555

CUSTOM, meaning of—Pre-emption—Single proprietor acquiring entire village, effect of—Custom, whether continues to exist 427

——— ALIENATION—Sale—Suit for declaration that sale shall not affect plaintiff's reversionary rights—Sale, whether can be converted into mortgage—Decree, proper—Necessity—Appeal, second—Vague and unsatisfactory findings.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a sale-deed in respect of a certain house executed by defendant No. 2, in favour of defendant No. 1, was null and void and shall not affect their reversionary rights. The First Court dismissed the suit, holding that the sale was for necessity. The District Judge on appeal held that necessity was proved only for Rs. 800 out of the total sale price of Rs. 2,000 and gave plaintiffs a decree to the effect that the sale should be converted into a mortgage for Rs. 800, which should be liable to redemption after the death of the alienor. The vendee preferred a second appeal to the Chief Court:

CUSTOM—concl.

Held, (1) that whether the sale was for necessity or not, it could not be converted into a mortgage which could be redeemed anywhere within 60 years;

(2) that the proper decree in such a case would be a decree declaring that the alienation shall only affect the reversioners' rights to the extent of Rs. 800, it being open to them to pay down the Rs. 800 and claim to recover the property anywhere within 12 years of succession opening out to them;

(3) that the findings of the District Judge with regard to the various items which formed part of the sale price were so vague and unsatisfactory that the Court was constrained to go into the merits of the case even in second appeal. P. RADHA RANI v. GUJAR MAL 496

——— ALIENATION by widow—Mortgage, prior—Necessity 63

——— SUCCESSION—Alienation by widow—Widow's estate, nature of—Proprietary body, rights of—Riwaj-i-am, entry in, construction of—Succession—Sister and sister's son.

A widow's estate is only limited for the benefit of reversioners and where there are none she is, to all intents and purposes, an absolute owner; and the onus is upon the proprietors of the patti to establish their right to contest an alienation by such a widow.

A riwaj-i-am contained an entry to the effect that if a man dies intestate leaving no relations, his immoveable property devolves on all the landowners of the thula or panna in which the land of the deceased is situate:

Held, that the entry was not intended to be an absolute provision excluding a sister or a sister's son from succession and it was not contemplated that they should yield to the proprietary body of a heterogeneous character. P. GIANI RAM v. MARI, 24 P. R. 1917 61

——— Daughters, exclusion of—Palwal, Gurgaon District.

One A., originally a resident of the town of Palwal in the Gurgaon District, obtained the village of Wair Badshahpur in the District of Bulandshahr from the Government for services rendered during the Mutiny of 1857. A died in 1866 leaving him surviving two widows, a minor son and two daughters. The estate being crippled with the debts contracted by A, the two widows applied to the Government to take over the estate in the Bulandshahr District under the management of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards took over the village under its management and it was assumed that it belonged to the widows, the minor son and the two daughters. In 1897 the minor attained majority and one half of the property was released to him, the other half remaining under the management of the Court of Wards on behalf of the daughters. The son sued for possession of the other half on the ground that according to the personal law and the custom prevailing in CUSTOM—concl'd.

Palwal in the District of Gurgaon the daughters and their issue did not in any case get a share in the paternal estate in the presence of the son:

Held, that the plaintiff had failed to prove an ancient invariable custom prevailing in his family in derogation of Muhammadan Law whereby a daughter was excluded from inheritance. A ALI ASGHAR v. COLLECTOR OF BULANDSHAHR, 15 A. L. J. 597 753 SUCCESSION Gift to daughter—Right of her descendants to succeed—Collaterals of donor, reversion to.

Where a gift of ancestral property is made to a daughter, the property after the death of the donee does not revert to the collaterals of the donor, but is inherited by the descendants of the donee. P ATA AHMAD v. NIAZ ALI 72

Primogeniture—Proof—Exclusion of females—Single heir succession 555

— — — Sangat of Nank Shahi Udasis Mahant, appointment, succession of.

In the sangat of Nanak Shahi Udasi Sadhus at Benares the custom as to the appointment of a new Mahant is that the Mahant for the time being has the right to appoint a chosen disciple, or chela, to succeed him on his death. A DHARAM DASS v. SADHO PRAKASH 177

Widow's estate—Right to enjoy whole income—Bhoplas of Multan Tehsil—Widow, whether entitled to maintenance only

The universal rule of Punjab agricultural custom is that a widow in the absence of male issue succeeds to a life-interest in her deceased husband's estate.

She is entitled to the enjoyment of the whole of the income of the estate and is not bound to account for her expenditure to possible reversioners.

Where the reversioners of one A, a member of the Bhopla tribe in the Multan Tehsil, sued his widow for possession of the property left by the deceased or in the alternative for an injunction restraining her from wasting the estate, alleging that according to the custom of the tribe the widow was entitled only to maintenance:

Held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish the custom set up by them. P MOHAMMAD BAKHSH v. KARM ILAHI, 14 P. L. R. 1917 26

DASAUNDH, right to, whether connotes right to possession or under-proprietary right in land

A right to cash dasaundh in a village is in the nature of a charge on its rents. It does not connote a right to possession of the village nor can it be deemed to be an under-proprietary right in its land. O PARTAB BATL v. HINDUJI PRASAD SINGH 11

DECLARATION, suit for, that plaintiff's liability on promissory note has ceased—Frame of suit 904

DECREE, obtained by fraud, suit to set aside—Previous relevant decree, whether must be set aside—Evidence Act I of 1873, s. 41

The plaintiff brought a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. In order to succeed in the suit, it was necessary for him to show that an earlier High Court decree (to which he was no party) was also invalid on the ground of fraud:

Held, that the suit was maintainable without the plaintiff first setting aside the High Court decree

DECREE—concl'd.

by a suit framed for the purpose, as he was entitled under section 44 of the Evidence Act to impeach it in the present suit on the ground of fraud. C AWINI KUMAR SAMADDA v. BANAMALI CHAKRABARTY, 21 C. W. N. 494 607

, setting aside of, for fraud—Irregularity in initial procedure, effect of.

The jurisdiction to impugn a previous decree on the ground of fraud is established law. But such jurisdiction should be exercised with care and reserve and proof must be required that there was actual and positive fraud, that is, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and a decree obtained by that contrivance. PAT MOHAN KRISHNA DAR v. HAR PRASAD 2

DEED, recital in—Estoppel 669

DEFAMATION Libellous statements in document—Innuendo Party defamed, question as to—Fair comment Justification—Damages, quantum of—Findings by Court—Questions of fact—Appeal, second—High Court, interference by—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100.

The question whether the whole or part of an alleged defamatory writing would be construed by an ordinary reader to refer to a particular person is a question of fact which, in English Courts, would be left to a jury, and where the Jury arrives at its verdict on this particular point through a misconstruction of the writing read as a whole or through other circumstances appearing in the case, that verdict is a verdict upon a question of fact.

The questions of justification, fair comment, bona fides and quantum of damages, in an action for defamation, are also all questions of fact.

Though it is a question for the Judge to say whether if certain facts were proved they would amount to justification, yet it is a question for the Jury to say whether an article complained of is a fair comment on a matter of public interest. It is only where the article is so clearly fair that there can be no question of libel on the admitted facts that a Judge may stop the case.

The High Court cannot, in second appeal, interfere with a finding on any of the above matters.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The doctrine of penal and exemplary damages is due to an illegitimate encroachment on the considerations of punishment by fine in criminal jurisprudence into realms of civil law and such doctrine should not be introduced into British India. M NAGANATHA SASTRI v. SUBRAMANIA IYER, 32 M. L. J. 392; 5 L. W. 598; 21 M. L. T. 324 126

DHARA dues—Talukdar, liability of—Decree, settlement, construction of.

At the time of the first Regular Settlement the ex-proprietors of a village which had been included in a taluka got a decree against the talukdar for their right to receive dhara dues in the village:

Held, that the talukdar was liable under the settlement decree to render the said dues to the ex-proprietors, whether he chose to collect them or not. O MAHESH CHARAN v. MUHAMMAD BAQAR ALI, 4 O. L. J. 154 45

DOCUMENT, construction of.

Where a document is silent with regard to interest and where there is no special mention of interest at a particular rate or of a particular sum handed over to the creditor, it must be taken that the intention of the parties is in making re-payment, to pay only the interest actually due under the written instrument. PAT GITA PRASAD SINGH v. RAGHO SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 777. 809 —, execution of—Date—Presumption.

It is a general though not a conclusive presumption that a document was made on the day of the date it bears. P C MINA KUMARI BIBI v. BIJOY SINGH, 32 M. L. J. 425; 1 P. L. W. 425; 21 C. W. N. 385; 5 L. W. 711; 21 M. L. T. 344; 15 A. L. J. 382; 25 C. L. J. 508; 19 Bom. L. R. 424; (1917) M. W. N. 473; 44 C. 662. 242

EASEMENT—Right to catch fish—Owner of lower land, whether can restrain owner of higher land from catching fish in his own land—Injunction 135

EASTERN BENGAL AND ASSAM DISORDERLY HOUSES ACT (II of 1907), S. 3, order passed under—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate to interfere with.

A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order passed by a Criminal Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act, 1907. C LALTA MOHAN CHAKRAVARTY v. HARENDRA KUMAR DE, 2 C. W. N. 1135 18 CR. L. J. 736 736

EJECTMENT—Co-sharer in possession of whole property dispossessed by trespasser—Adverse possession against co-sharer, effect of—Jus tertii, plea of.

One of two brothers, who had an undivided 8-annas share in a holding, assuming to himself the sole ownership of the holding leased it to the plaintiff intending to exclude his co-sharer, who had disappeared and was considered as dead or having abandoned the property. The plaintiff, having been ousted by the defendant a trespasser, brought a suit for his ejectment:

Held, that as the title of the plaintiff's lessor had become adverse to his co-sharer, the plaintiff obtained title to the whole by adverse possession and that, therefore, he was entitled to recover the whole property from the defendant whose plea of jus tertii could not be of any avail.

Quære. Whether an undivided co-sharer who is in exclusive possession of the whole property is entitled to recover the whole from a trespasser who dispossessed him, or is liable to be put in joint-possession with the trespasser. C BASIRUDDI SHEIKH v. MOBARAK MUNSHI 157

ESTOPPEL See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE s. 11; EVIDENCE ACT, s. 116.

— by pleading 462

— Deed, recital in, truth of.

No person who is a party to the putting forward of a recital in a deed by another and induces a third person to act on it can afterwards be heard to say that that recital is not accurate. C BHUBANESWARI DEBI v. HARDHAN BHATTACHARJYA, 21 C. W. N. 728 669

—, doctrine of, applicability of 383

EVIDENCE—Judgment in criminal trial, value of.

A judgment in a criminal trial is by itself evidence only of the conviction or acquittal which it records, and of no other matter. O MUHAMDI BEGAM v. DURGA PRASAD, 4 O. L. J. 299 452 EVIDENCE ACT I of 1872), Ss. 13, 115—Estoppel—Judgments not inter parties, admissibility of.

Judgments not inter parties are admissible in evidence where they are relevant under section 13 of the Evidence Act. They are evidence of usage as instances where the right in question was claimed or denied or recognized. Their evidentiary value, however, must depend on the facts of the particular case. M SUNDARAM IYER v. THEETHARAPPA MUDALIAR 159

— S. 13—Judgment not inter parties recognizing right in dispute, admissibility of.

Judgments not between parties to the suit pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, containing a declaration that the right in dispute has been asserted and recognized in a Court of Law, are admissible in evidence under the provisions of section 13 of the Evidence Act. PAT MUHAMMAD EHIA v. GANGA DAYAL OJHA 838

— S. 13—Tenant, status of—Decree in favour of stranger, admissibility of.

A decree (whether obtained by the plaintiff's predecessor or a stranger), in which it was found that the defendants-tenants had a holding in a certain estate on a certain rental, is admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act for the purpose of showing that the defendants held a holding in that estate on that rental. C BYMKESH CHAKRABARTY v. JAGADISWAR ROY 442

— Ss. 21, 32—Admission Statement against party's interest, admissibility of 988

— S. 32 988

— S. 34—Decree obtained by fraud, suit to set aside—Previous relevant decree, whether must be set aside 607

— S. 90—Ancient document not signed or sealed—Presumption under s. 90, applicability of.

Section 90 of the Evidence Act does not apply to an ancient document which is neither signed nor sealed nor purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person. C JANENDRA MOHUN v. GOPAL CHANDRA HAR 450

— S. 91—Suit for possession of joint property—Partition, deed of, unregistered admissibility of.

The factum of a partition, as distinguished from its terms, may be proved by evidence apart from the deed of partition itself.

Per Beaman, J. A fact which does not necessarily constitute a term, in any real sense, of a contract, grant, or other disposition of property, may be proved, although the writing in which the terms of that contract, grant, or disposition of property are embodied cannot be proved for want of registration. B CHHOTTA-LAL ADITRAM TRAVDI v. BAI MAHAKORE, 19 Bom. L. R. 322; 41 B. 466 83

— S. 92, applicability of—Mortgage by conditional sale—Mortgagee taking possession of mortgaged property 371

EVIDENCE ACT—concl'd.

——— S. 92—Construction of document—Motive of parties, how far relevant.

In construing a contract a Court is not permitted to speculate about the possible intention and motive of the parties, it is concerned only with their intention as expressed by the words they have deliberately used.

C BASIRUDDI v. AFSARANNESSA BIBI, 21 C. W. N. 860
833

——— Ss. 94, 95, 96, 97 13

——— S. 94—Construction of document—Evidence, extrinsic, admissibility of—Compromise.

Where the language of a document is clear and applies without difficulty to the facts of the case, no extrinsic evidence can be admitted for the purpose of affecting its interpretation.

In a compromise entered into between A and Z, A, agreed to pay a certain annuity to Z, and her heirs and subsequently a compromise was arrived at between A. and B. under which B. agreed to contribute towards the said annuity "for payment to Z."

Held, that the former compromise or any other extrinsic evidence was inadmissible to show that under the latter compromise B. had agreed to contribute towards the said annuity "for payment to Z. and her heirs." O YAR MUHAMMAD KHAN v. BAQAR KHAN, 4 O. L. J. 313
491

——— Ss. 114, illus. (b)—Statement of approver, value of—Corroboration, necessity of 696

——— S. 116—Estoppel Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgagee in possession, whether estopped from denying right of purchaser of mortgaged property to redeem.

Property belonging to a lunatic was usufructuarly mortgaged by his brother, who was his guardian, to the defendant. On the death of the lunatic the property was sold by the brother to the plaintiff, who thereupon brought a suit for redemption of the mortgage against the defendant:

Held, that section 116 of the Evidence Act did not estop the defendant, who was placed in possession of the land as a mortgagee, from requiring the plaintiff to make out his title to redeem the mortgaged property by virtue of his purchase C DENI-BESWAR SARMA BARA THAKUR v BETHORAM SAIKIA
648

——— Ss. 133, 114, ILLUS. (b)—Approver, statement of, value of—Corroboration, necessity of.

An accomplice should not be convicted on the statement of an approver who is by nature a liar, unless such testimony is strongly corroborated and the corroboration distinctly implicates the accused in, and connects him with the crime committed. P NAND SINGH v EMPEROR, 9 P. W. R 1917 CR.; 18 CR. L. J. 696
696

EXECUTION—Agreement to satisfy decree—Assignment, procuring of, in breach and execution—Suit by judgment-debtor for recovery of amount paid in execution, nature of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, whether bar.

A suit for return of money paid by a judgment-debtor to a person, who, in violation of a contract to enter satisfaction of the decree, procured the assignment of it to himself and realized money in execution, is one for breach of contract and is not barred by the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. M CHALAPURAM BANK, LTD. v. ZAMOKIN BABA AMERGAU, (1917) M. W. N. 359
549

EXECUTION—concl'd.

——— Amendment of decree—Person not judgment-debtor made judgment-debtor—Decree, whether can be executed against such person.

A suit for sale on a mortgage against G. and J. was decreed against G. alone. The mortgaged property proved insufficient to satisfy the decree and an application was made for a personal decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act as against G. alone and the decree was passed. On the attachment of certain property as the property of G., T. the widow of J. objected and got the property released. The decree-holder applied for the amendment of the decree to the effect that the name of T. might be added as judgment-debtor and got an ex parte order in his favour. He then applied for execution of the decree as against T. T. objected. The application was, however, dismissed as barred by time. On the decree-holder's appeal:

Held, that apart from the question of limitation the Court below would have been fully justified in refusing to put the decree into execution on the simple ground that the name of T. was fraudulently added to the decree without any decree having been passed against her. A BHARATH INDU v. TILOK KUNWAR
47

——— Attachment—Sale of attached property by judgment-debtor—Subsequent attachment and sale of same property in execution of another decree—Execution purchaser and private purchaser—rights of 242

——— Decision on preliminary point—Appeal, whether lies.

Where a judgment-debtor objected to execution on the grounds, first, that the decree was not capable of execution and, secondly, that there was nothing due under it, and the Court decided the first ground of objection against him:

Held, that no appeal lay against that decision before the second issue was gone into. PAT MAHAMA PRASAD SINGH v. SUKHDIYA KUAR, 1 P. L. W. 759; (1917) PAT. 191
517

——— Decree, construction of—Mortgage—Executing Court, powers of.

One G was a co-sharer in four villages to the extent of eight gandas in each village. He executed a deed of mortgage in respect of his eight-gandas share in the villages in favour of R. and J. The latter obtained a decree for sale on foot of their mortgage and in execution applied for the sale of a four-annas share in mahal G. in each of the four villages, stating that the description of the property given in the mortgage-deed as eight gandas came to four annas in mahal G. in each village. The judgment-debtor filed objections and contended that only eight-gandas out of the entire four annas, that is to say, one-tenth of the original share in each village was meant:

Held, that the property directed by the decree to be sold was the entire share of the mortgagor, which after partition was described as four annas in mahal G. in each village, and that the mortgagor had mortgaged his entire share which he described as eight gandas in each of the four villages. A SURESH RAI v. LACHMI NARAYAN RAI, 15 A. L. J. 276
288

EXECUTION—concl'd.

—Land delivered to decree-holder in execution of decree—Crops growing, whether pass.

Where, in execution of a decree in a title suit, possession of land is given to the decree-holder the growing crops pass with the land. C KRISHNA PRAMODA DAS V. KEDAR NATH BASU 732

Pardanashin lady—Fraudulent conduct.

The mere fact that a judgment-debtor, who is a pardanashin lady, keeps her door closed is per se no evidence at all of fraudulent conduct on her part, unless there is anything to show that she deliberately does so or attempts to do so against the executing officer. O SUGHRA BEGAM C. LACHMI NARAIN, 4 O. L. J. 345 399

Set-off of Statute-barred decree, whether allowable.

The form of execution by setting off cross-decrees is given in the Code of Civil Procedure and no equitable considerations can add to or detract from the provisions of the Statute. Therefore, a Statute-barred decree in favour of the judgment-debtor cannot be set off against a decree sought to be executed against him. C MUNSUR ALI V. ABHOYA CHARAN DAS, 21 C. W. N. 1147 816

FRAUD, decree obtained by, suit to set aside—Previous relevant decree, whether must be set aside 607

FRAUDULENT conduct in execution—Pardanashin lady keeping doors of house shut 399

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT (5 & 6 GEO. V, CH. 61), S. 107—Revision—High Court, interference by, with order under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code 715

GRANT, construction of, in England and India—Permanent, heritable and transferable tenure—Mineral rights.

When a grant is made by a zemindar of a tenure at a fixed rent, even though the tenure may be permanent, heritable and transferable, minerals cannot be held to have formed part of the grant in the absence of express evidence to that effect.

A Talabi Brahmatrar grant does not, by its mere character, create title to minerals.

The word 'grant' as used in legal transactions in India is not to be understood in its technical English meaning of a conveyance at common law of remainders, reversions and incorporeal hereditaments which did not lie in livery or of which livery could not be given. P C SASHI BHUSHAN MISRA V. JYOTI PRASHAD SINGH DEO, 21 C. W. N. 377; 15 A. L. J. 201; 32 M. L. J. 245; (1917) M. W. N. 226; 25 C. L. J. 265; 1 P. L. W. 361; 21 M. L. T. 303; 19 Bom. L. R. 416; 6 L. W. 2; 44 C. 585 139

GUARDIAN AD LITEM, appointment of—Adverse interest—Consent of guardian 227

GUARDIAN AND WARD—Alienation by guardian, suit for cancellation of, and possession—Article applicable to suit 664

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (VIII OF 1890),

S. 17—Minor, appointment of, guardian of—Mother, right of—Reversioner, right of, as against step-father.

An infant minor's mother, even in case of her remarriage, is the natural guardian of the person of the minor.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT—concl'd.

A reversioner of the deceased father of the minor is a fit person to be appointed guardian of the property of the minor as against the new husband of the minor's mother. P AHMAD C. RAHMATAN, 32 P. W. R. 1917 107

S. 29—Contract, to sell minor's property—

Sanction—Minor, liability of

A contract, entered into by a guardian appointed as such under the Guardians and Wards Act to sell the minor's property, with the sanction of the District Judge, at a price higher than that fixed in the sanction, is valid and enforceable against the minor. C HELLAEUDDIN MIA'S WIFE C. JANAKI NATH SIRCAR 490

Ss. 32, 43—Guardian, suspension of, effect of—

Court, power of, to suspend guardian—Construction of s. 32.

The words of section 32 of the Guardians and Wards Act are wide enough to cover an order of suspension of the guardian by the Judge, as suspension is in effect a total restriction for a time of the powers of the guardian.

The suspension of a guardian for a time does not deprive the Court of power to deal with him subsequently.

Until a guardian has actually been removed or discharged, he remains a guardian even though his powers may have been curtailed and the Court has authority under the Act to pass such orders on him as are necessary for the protection of the minor's property. C URMILA SUNDARI DAS V. RATI KANTA SAHA 397

S. 39 (d), (g)—Guardian of minor's person, removal of—Marriage of minor—Court, duty of.

It is no part of a Court's duty under the Guardians and Wards Act to assume direct responsibility for the marriage of a minor. But a ward of Court cannot marry without the consent of the Court and if a proposed marriage is unsuitable, the Court may restrain the marriage, even though the guardian has given his consent. A MOHAMMAD FASAHAT ULLAH V. TAHIRA BIDI 136

Ss. 43, 32—Guardian, suspension of, effect of—Court, power of, to suspend guardian—Construction of s. 32 397

HINDU LAW—Landlord and tenant—Lease, permanent, by head of mutt, validity of—Suit for possession by successor of matadhipathi—Adverse possession, plea of—Trust—Head of mutt, position of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10; Sch. I, Art. 134.

The head of a mutt stands in relation to the mutt in the position of a trustee. The assets of the mutt are vested in him as the owner of the mutt in trust for the institution itself.

The head of a mutt cannot, in the absence of necessity, bind his successors-in-office by a permanent lease at a fixed rent for all time.

A lessee, however, holding under a permanent lease from a matadhipathi can perfect his title to the permanent lease by adverse enjoyment for more than twelve years under Article 134 of the Limitation Act, the permanent lease being a transfer within the meaning of the Article.

The fact of the lessee's knowledge as to the restricted interest possessed by the lessor at the time of the grant may be an important piece of evidence in judging of what interest the transferee contracted to take, but such knowledge cannot by itself disentitle the transferee to the benefit of Article 134 of the Limitation Act. M BALUSWAMI AYYER v. VENKITASWAMY NAICKEN, 32 M. L. J. 24; 40 M. 745. 531

HINDU LAW—contd.

—Religious office, appointment to—Appointment by compromise, effect of—Compromise of doubtful claims, applicability of principles of, to appointment of successor by head of religious institution—Family settlement—Mutt, head of, whether trustee—Mutadhipathi, powers of—Laches in contesting validity of appointment, effect of—Chinnapatam, nature and duties of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120.

The head of a mutt does not stand in relation to the mutt properties in the position of a trustee in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and no suit lies to remove him from office under section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The appointment by the head of a religious institution of his successor-in-office in accordance with the usage of the institution is invalid if made as the result of a compromise, whereby the appointor either averts a danger or secures an advantage to himself.

The Chinnapatam is an office inferior in sanctity to that of the Pandarasannadhi or head of a Mutt and the position of the Chinnapatam is analogous to that of an ordinary reversioner with a mere spes successionis dependent on his surviving the Pandarasannadhi who appoints him.

The cause of action for a suit to remove a person from the office of Pandarasannadhi arises from the date of the vesting of the said office in him on the application of Article 120 of the Limitation Act, and not from the date when he was appointed to the Chinnapatam office.

During the progress of litigation between T. and N. in which the latter questioned the appointment of T. as Pandarasannadhi under an alleged forged Will, T. entered into a compromise with N. whereby, in consideration of N. abandoning the contest and refraining from putting T. to proof of the Will, T. appointed N. to succeed him to the office of Pandarasannadhi on his death, and immediately appointed him Chinnapatam, giving him large properties of the mutt.

Held, that the appointment was invalid.

Per Wallis, C. J. — The principles relating to family settlements and compromises of doubtful claims are inapplicable to agreements to fill up a religious office of importance in the eyes of Hindu worshippers, which raise very different considerations.

Per Napier, J. — The trustee of a religious and charitable trust has, in respect of litigation not affecting the office, the same right of compromise as an ordinary trustee has, and a compromise even of conflicting claims to an office is not necessarily unlawful or opposed to public policy, but must be scrutinized by the Court before which it is pleaded for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is in violation of the trust of the institution or affects adversely the interests of the religious office.

A mere irregularity in the appointment may be cured by efflux of time. If the qualifications of a person appointed fall little short of those required by usage and the appointment is otherwise unobjectionable and is made in the interests of the institution, the Court will not interfere with the appointment. But the case is different where the appointment is not made in the interests of the institution. M KAILASAM PILLAI v. NATARAJA TAMBIRAN, 32 M. L. J. 271. 627

HINDU LAW—contd.

—ADOPTION by minor widow, validity of—Ratification of imperfect adoption, legality of—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2.

The age of capacity of a person, whether male or female, to make a valid adoption under Hindu Law commences at the age of 16, that is, on the completion of the 15th year.

A widow, therefore, has not the legal discretion to adopt a proper boy to her husband before she finishes the 15th year of her age.

It is only the widow's discretion exercised after she attains majority and is thus capable of legal discretion in civil matters that can validate the adoption made by her to her husband. The discretion cannot be replaced, when she is less than 16, by her guardian's intelligent and disinterested advice.

Where a widow is directed by her husband to adopt a particular boy and she has no discretion in the matter, her adoption of that boy, even when she is under 15 years of age, is valid.

An imperfect adoption by a minor widow cannot be ratified by her after her attainment of majority.

Per Oldfield, J. — The ratification of an adoption should not be interpreted loosely as covering estoppel, which debars the party from denying, or conduct, which would establish against him a consent when the adoption was made. The only doctrine that is akin to it in its relation to adoption is the definition of ratification given by Lord Watson in Stewart v. Kennedy, (1890) 15 A. C. 76, as the 'confirmation of an imperfect obligation by the party who was not legally bound by it.' M KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU v. PATAMSETTI VENKATASWAMI, 32 M. L. J. 119, 5 L. V. 63. 518

—ALIENATION—Father, transfer by—Mortgage for legal necessity—Interest, onerous—Mortgagee, position of—Court, duty of—Decree on mortgage obtained against father alone—Sons, position of.

Where a Hindu father makes a mortgage for legal necessity at an onerous rate of interest, the sons, although bound by the mortgage, are not bound by the rate of interest, unless the mortgagee establishes that such rate of interest was justified by the legal necessity of the family. If the mortgagee fails to prove this fact, the Courts not only have a discretion but are under an obligation to vary the rate of interest to a reasonable limit.

Where a decree is obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor alone on the basis of a mortgage executed by a Hindu father and carrying interest at an onerous rate, his sons, who were no parties to the said decree, can, in a subsequent suit against the mortgagee decree-holder, be granted relief to the effect that if they pay to the mortgagee

HINDU LAW—contd.

the principal mortgage-money together with interest thereon at a reasonable rate and costs of his suit by a certain date, the mortgage decree shall not be executed against the mortgaged property. O SADHO CHARAN PRASAD v. RAM RATAN, 4 O. L. J. 305 369 —ALIENATION by widow—Reversioners, consent by.

The plaintiffs, who were consenting parties to a deed of sale by a Hindu widow in favour of the defendants purporting to be for legal necessity and which contained inaccurate recitals not known to the defendants to be such, induced the defendants, their nephews, by their conduct to lay out money for the erection of permanent buildings upon the lands purchased by them, and on their succession as reversioners after the death of the widow, brought a suit to recover possession of the lands sold on the ground that there was no legal necessity for the sale.

Held, that there was a clear case of estoppel by conduct against the plaintiffs and the mere fact that at the time when the plaintiffs induced their nephews to lay out their money, there was a mere spes successionis was not a sufficient ground why they should not be bound by the sale. C BHUBANESWARI DEBI v. HARADHAN BHATTACHARJYA, 21 C. W. N. 728 669 —JOINT FAMILY—Alienation—Necessity—Debt incurred by managing members—Liability of family.

Where a debt is contracted on behalf of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara Law by its managing member or members and it is proved that the debt was contracted for the benefit of the joint family, any judgment obtained against such managing member or members in respect of such debt is binding upon all the members, adults and minors, and the joint property of the family is liable for the satisfaction and discharge of the same. PAT MOHAN KRISHNA DAR v. HAR PRASAD 2 —Alienation—Sale, suit to set aside, by minor member—Consideration, major portion of, for legal necessity.

Certain joint family property was sold by the mother and the adult brother of a minor member of a joint Hindu family and it was found that a major portion of the consideration was for legal necessity. On a suit by the minor member to set aside the sale:

Held, that in justice of the case the sale should stand on payment by the defendant-vendee to the plaintiff the amount which was not required for legal necessity. A CHATTAR v. CHOTE 269 —Alienation by father—Sons, right of, to set aside sale—Antecedent debt, consideration paid, whether constitutes.

The amount of consideration paid in cash to a Hindu father at the time of the sale by him of joint property, which is not required for the necessity of the family, is not an antecedent debt for which the sons are liable on the sale being set aside.

The money paid to a Hindu father as consideration for the sale at the time of the sale cannot be regarded as a debt of the father until the sale has been set aside and the right of the vendee to get back the sale consideration from the father has accrued. A MADAN GOPAL v. SATI PRASAD, 15 A. L. J. 425; 39 A. 485 451

HINDU LAW—contd.

—JOINT FAMILY—Minor—Guardian, natural—Father's brother's wife—Alienation—Legal necessity—Performance of gaya saradh of uncle.

A Hindu minor's aunt (father's brother's wife) is not his natural guardian.

The expenses of the performance of gaya saradh of a Hindu minor's uncle, not being beneficial to the minor, do not constitute any legal necessity, and the minor is not bound to defray the same. PAT SUBA MAHTON v. MUNSHI MAHTON 625

—Mitakshara—Ancestral property—Partition, suit for, by son in father's lifetime, whether maintainable—Partition decree—Minor unrepresented in suit, whether bound.

A suit for partition of ancestral property by a Mitakshara son in the lifetime of his father is maintainable.

A minor unrepresented in a partition suit, is, in the absence of prejudice, bound by the partition decree. PAT AJODHYA PRASAD v. MANOHAR PRASAD 131

—Mitakshara—Blending of self-acquired property with ancestral property—Effect of entries in account books as showing whether funds are joint or separate—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 21, 32—Admission—Statement against party's interest, admissibility of.

A, a member of a Hindu joint family, whose home was at Lucknow, practised as a Pleader at Hardoi, and made considerable savings from his professional earnings. He eventually became managing member, but was all along entrusted with the management of the joint family property in Hardoi District. Throughout he kept the accounts of the joint property and of his own earnings in one account book. He purchased sundry properties out of the funds so entered in the name of his son-in-law B and stated that he made such purchases to provide for B.

Held, that, by blending his private earnings with the receipts and payments on joint account, he showed an intention to make them joint property; but that it was not conclusive that all purchases entered in the book were made for the joint family; and that as regards the purchases in the name of B, A's statement that they were made to provide for B was a statement against his own interest and as such admissible in evidence, and that coupled with the other evidence in the case it established B's title to such properties as against the joint family. P C SURAJ NARAIN v. RATAN LAL, 21 C. W. N. 1065; 20 O. C. 211; 2 P. L. W. 160; 33 M. L. J. 180; 15 A. L. J. 684; 19 Bom. L. R. 737; 22 M. L. T. 121; 26 C. L. J. 267 988

—Mitakshara—Mortgage by member—Property to extent of mortgagor's interest, whether can be made liable—Equity arising out of representation of authority.

Where the property of a Hindu joint family is mortgaged by one of the members not being the head of the family for an antecedent debt or proven necessity of the joint family, the general law is that the mortgage is not valid at all, even to the extent of the mortgagor's interest.

It is possible, however, that exceptions to this general rule may arise from special circumstances, e. g., from a representation or undertaking by the mortgagor that he had power to mortgage the joint

HINDU LAW—contd.

property. P C LACHHMAN PRASAD v. SARNAM SINGH, 15 A. L. J. 584 2 P. L. W. 29; 21 C. W. N. 99; 33 M. L. J. 39; 19 Bom. L. R. 646; 26 C. L. J. 97; (1917) M. W. N. 516; 6 L. W. 334 284

— JOINT FAMILY — Mitakshara — Partition, suit for, dismissed, though right to partition admitted Status, whether joint or several.

A member of a Hindu joint family instituted a suit for partition. The suit was dismissed on the ground that though he had a legal right to partition, he had in the Judge's opinion no proper motive for exercising that right. Thereafter he mortgaged his share in the family property, and on the mortgagee suing on his mortgage he claimed to be still joint:

Held, that notwithstanding the judgment the mortgagor had become separate from the date of his suit and that the mortgage of his share was valid.

P C KAWAL NAIN v. BUDH SINGH, 15 A. L. J. 581; 2 P. L. W. 57; 21 C. W. N. 986; 33 M. L. J. 42; 19 Bom. L. R. 642; 26 C. L. J. 101; (1917) M. W. N. 514; 6 L. W. 330 286

— Money advanced by one member—Presumption—Burden of proof

Where a member of a joint Hindu family advances money on a mortgage, the presumption is that the money is advanced from the joint funds and the burden of proving to the contrary lies on those who allege that he advanced the money out of his self-acquired funds. A PUNNU v. KOURA 463

— Partition, partial, effect of—Possession of undivided property by one member—Right of other members

Where after a partial partition of joint family property one member continues in possession of certain properties not divided between the members of the family, his possession still continues to be the possession of the other members of the family though they may be divided, till some event happens which renders his possession exclusive or hostile to the others. PAT JAGDAMB LAL v. BIKU LAL 115

— Partition—Presumption—Burden of proof—Assignment of property to different sons for business purposes, effect of—Property acquired by member from nucleus of family property, nature of—Acquisition in name of one member, whether exclusion—Suit for partition—Hotchpot.

Where a Hindu family has been found to be joint at a certain date the presumption is that it continues to be joint, and the onus of proving that there was a partition or separation subsequent to that date is on the person who alleges it.

The mere assignment by the father of certain property to his sons to enable them to start in business on their own account has not the same effect as a formal partition of the joint property.

Where a family is joint and there is a nucleus from which property may be acquired, the presumption is that property acquired by any member is joint property and the onus of proving that it is self-acquired is on those who allege it.

The mere fact that any particular acquisition is in the name of one or more of the brothers does not warrant the assumption that it is the exclusive acquisition of the person or persons named and not of the whole of the joint family.

HINDU LAW—contd.

In a suit for possession of joint family property by partition, it appeared that R. the deceased father of the parties had three sons, one of whom had received a share of the property and executed a deed renouncing all further claim thereto on the 25th April 1886. Subsequently R. and his other two sons continued to live together, but some years before 1895 R. gave a house, a shop and some moveable property to the plaintiff who thereafter lived separately and conducted a separate business. On the 25th October 1895 R. executed a Will in which after reciting these facts he bequeathed all his remaining property to the defendant who was then in possession. On the 4th April 1896 the plaintiff sued for a declaration to the effect that this Will should not affect his rights of inheritance in the property to the extent of a half share. This suit was decreed as it was held that there had been no formal partition or separation of the plaintiff from the family and he was not, therefore, bound by the terms of the Will. The plaintiff brought this suit for possession of his share:

Held, (1) that the family having been found in the earlier suit to be joint and there being no formal partition thereafter, all property acquired by the defendant out of the original nucleus of ancestral property was joint family property, as also was the property in the possession of the plaintiff which must be brought into hotch-pot at the time of the partition;

(2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in all the family property which was in the defendant's possession as well as in his own possession. P NANAK CHAND v. LACHHMAN DAS, 97 P. W. R. 1917; 82 P. R. 1917 775

— JOINT FAMILY property used for joint purposes—Right of one member to build upon joint land—Right of other members.

Defendant, a member of a joint family, during the absence of the plaintiff, another member of the family, erected a building on a portion of the joint land which had been used for many years by the members of the family for certain purposes:

Held, that as the portion of the land on which the building was erected was such that neither party could have exclusive use of it without injury to the other, the plaintiff should have joint use of the building with the defendant, though the strict right of the plaintiff would have been to have the building demolished and to have the land restored to its original condition as it was before the defendant put up the building. C JATINDRA MOHAN RAY v. RAMESH CHANDRA RAY 504

— Specific performance—Agreement to sell by manager—Minor members, contract on behalf and for benefit of 142

— PARTITION—Declaration in writing of unilateral intention to become divided in status
An unequivocal declaration by a member of an undivided family of his intention to be divided in status is sufficient to effect a partition, although division by metes and bounds may be deferred. M SIKHAMANI PANDITHAR v. AMMANI AMMAL 36 ——— PARTITION—Father or grandfather, right of, to effect partition—Share of co-parcener, gift of, validity of.

HINDU LAW—contd.

The right of a father to partition family property between himself and his sons and their sons includes the right to make such partition when the sons are dead and the grandsons are living. A partition at the will of the father or grandfather can only be valid if it is equal and fair.

Ordinarily a co-parcener cannot make a gift of his undivided share; but once the co-parcenary is converted into a tenancy in common by means of a partition, there is no bar to a member of the family disposing of his share by gift and it can make no difference in law that both the partition and gift were effected by means of one and the same instrument. M AIYAVIER v. SEBRAMANIA IYER, 32 M. L. J. 430; 6 L. W. 22 205

——— SUCCESSION—Naikins—Daughters and sons

In the case of a naikin or prostitute dancing girl, daughters are preferential heirs over sons. B JAVA MADAV KALAVANT v. MANJUNATH TAI CHANDU, 19 Bom. L. R. 320 78

——— Sudras—Illegitimate son, rights of—Share, claim for, after partition between father and legitimate sons, maintainability of.

An illegitimate son of a Sudra can, under Hindu Law, take a share equal to that of a legitimate son at his father's choice, and, after his father's death, can demand of the legitimate sons a share equal to half that of a legitimate son.

Where, however, a partition has already been effected between the father and his legitimate sons, in which nothing is reserved for the illegitimate son, the latter cannot claim his share.

An illegitimate son does not take a share in his father's estate at birth. M NATHAMUNI MUDALI v. PARTHASARADI MUDALI, 22 M. L. T. 39; 6 L. W. 188; 33 M. L. J. 203 830

——— WAKF—Mahant, power of, scope of—Removal of mahant, whether can be effected through surrender.

The head of a religious or charitable institution has no power to bargain away his office or alter the constitution of the institution of which he is in charge.

Where the right to remove a mahant had never rested with the plaintiff in the past:

Held, that he could not acquire that right or take it out of the hands of the Court or other lawful authority by inducing the mahant for the time being to agree to surrender that right to him. PAT KRISHNA DAYAL GIR v. LALDHARI GIR 276 ——— WIDOW, compromise of suit by, whether binding on reversioners—Adoption, suit to set aside, by reversioners in lifetime of widow, whether maintainable.

A Hindu widow has power to compromise a suit so as to bind all the reversioners, provided the compromise is for the benefit of the whole family.

HINDU LAW—contd.

Where out of collusion or connivance a widow fails to have an adoption set aside, the next reversioners have a right to have it set aside or declared invalid during her lifetime. PAT SUNDAR PRASAD SINGH v. RAMBATI KUER 150 ——— WIDOW—Co-widows—Sale of house by one co-widow—Improvements by vendee—Death of vendor—House reverting to other co-widow—Vendee, right of, to compensation.

Where a transferee of a house from a co-widow chooses to spend a large sum of money upon the house, he does so at his peril and is not entitled to the amount so spent on the house reverting to the other co-widow on the death of the vendor-co-widow. A NANDI v. SARUP LAL, 15 A. L. J. 509; 39 A. 463 71 ——— Mortgage by widow—Consent given by reversioners—Necessity—Presumption.

The consent given by the reversioners to a mortgage executed by a Hindu widow raises a presumption of the existence of legal necessity, even where a sum of money is paid to one of the reversioners for obtaining his consent. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD. 865

——— re-marriage of—Forfeiture of property granted for maintenance.

A Hindu widow on her re-marriage, although such re-marriage is permissible and legal according to the custom of the caste to which she belongs, forfeits her interest in the property allotted to her by a family arrangement based upon her right to maintenance out of the interest which her deceased husband had in the ancestral estate.

It would make no difference in her position whether section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does or does not apply to her case, as that section has not introduced any change in the Hindu Law so far as it relates to the forfeiture of a widow's interest on her re-marriage. C MOHAMAD UMAR v. MAN KOER, 21 C. W. N. 906 783

——— Sale of inherited property without legal necessity or consent of reversioners, validity of—Purchaser, position of

The sale by a Hindu widow without legal necessity or the consent of the reversioners of property inherited from her husband, is not void, but is only voidable at the instance of the reversioners or persons claiming under them.

Obiter.—A purchaser under such a sale is entitled to sue in ejectment. C MAHENDRA CHANDRA DATTA v. ABHOY CHARAN SARMA 355 ——— Surrender—Gift of whole estate to presumptive reversioner, validity of.

A Hindu widow is competent to surrender by way of gift the whole of her husband's estate in favour of the presumptive reversioner of her deceased husband. A SHAM RATHI RAI v. JAICHHA KUNWAR, 15 A. L. J. 364 117 ——— WILL—Ancestral property—Dispositions in favour of female members, validity of.

The father in a joint and undivided Hindu family can, with the consent of his adult son and with the consent of his relations who are interested in a minor son of his, make valid provisions by Will in favour of the female members of his family, provided the said provisions are reasonable in extent and value.

HINDU LAW—concl'd.

A disposition by Will of ancestral property may, in certain circumstances, stand on the same footing as a disposition by deed inter vivos provided the consent of the party to be affected is obtained. M APPAN PATRACHARIAR v. SRINIVASACHARIAR, 32 M. L. J. 364; 5 L. W. 544; (1917) M. W. N. 355; 21 M. L. T. 408 118

—WILL, interpretation of—Will executed by talukdar in favour of person who would not have succeeded under the Oudh Estates Act, effect of—Absolute estate conferred by Will—Devise, lapse of, by death—Ultior disposition becoming operative on death of first devisee during lifetime of testator 469

—Sanyasam or asceticism, incidents of—Will of sanyasi, construction of—Testamentary disposition of sanyasi's property, principles governing—Conduct negating sanyasam, evidence of

The essentials of Sanyasam, according to Hindu Law, are that the postulant for Sanyasam should perform the necessary rites and ceremonies prescribed by the Sastras, in particular the prajapathyeshti or agneshthi and the giraja homam, and finally relinquish all property and abandon all worldly concerns, down to even a desire for them. The relinquishment need not be in favour of any particular person, but one about to become a Sanyasi may simply abandon his property in which case the law will vest it in his heirs. The mere adoption of the external symbols of Sanyasam as the wearing of coloured clothes or shaving of the head is not enough.

Hindu text-writers examined.

A Will made by a Sanyasi takes effect from its execution, as the Sanyasi becomes dead to the world from the date of his entry into the holy order, and not from his death.

Evidence may be tendered to show by the conduct of the Sanyasi that he did not intend to abandon his property and that a Will executed by him during his so-called Sanyasam was not intended to take effect. The non-delivery of the Will to the beneficiary named in it and its retention by the testator is one important test showing that the testator did not intend to abandon his property during his natural life.

Where the Will of a Sanyasi directs the beneficiary under it to perform the testator's death ceremonies, it negatives the intention that the Will should take effect immediately as there are no death ceremonies to be performed for a Sanyasi and a subsequent codicil will prevail over the earlier Will. M KONDOL ROW v. SWAMULAVARU, 6 L. W. 147; (1917) M. W. N. 583 535

HINDU LAW AND USAGE—Ubhayam or festival, performance of, by female, right of.

The right to perform an ubhayam or festival being a secular privilege unconnected with the right to honours, a female is not disqualified by reason of her sex from performing an ubhayam in a temple.

It would ordinarily be the duty of temple authorities to receive money that may be tendered to perform a festival from whomsoever it may come.

The burden of proving that none but a male can perform an ubhayam or festival is on the person setting up such a special custom. M PANKAJAMMAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 5 L. W. 346; 32 M. L. J. 237; 21 M. L. T. 411 516

HINDU WIDOWS' RE-MARRIAGE ACT (XV of 1856), S. 2, effect of 783

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTE.

A construction which makes a certain provision of an Act superfluous is not legitimate when another construction explaining the insertion of the provision is easily available. M SRINIVASA RANGA ROW v. RAJAH OF KARVETNAGAR, 5 L. W. 725 811

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

The rule that where a Statute creates a right and provides at the same time a remedy, that remedy and no other is available, has no application to a case where a right is not created by the Statute but exists independently of it. P DUNI CHAND v. MOHAMAD HUSSAIN, 22 P. R. 1917. 220 —Contract Act (IX of 1872)—Illustration to section, value of.

The proper course in the construction of a Statute is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view.

The Indian Contract Act does not profess to be a complete code dealing with the law relating to contracts. It purports to do no more than to define and amend certain parts of that law.

An illustration to a section ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section itself and certainly it ought not to do so when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer. B SHIVLAL MOTILAL v. BIRDICHAND JIVRAJ, 19 Bom. L. R. 370 194

JUDGE AND COUNSEL, respective obligations of.

Obligations of the Bench and the Bar and to each other discussed. PAT NIBARAN CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. EMPEROR, (1917) Pat. 239; 2 P. L. W. 83; 18 Cr. L. J. 670 318

JUDGMENT—Evidence, nature of.

A Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. P C MINA KUMARI BIBI v. BIJOY SINGH, 32 M. L. J. 425; 1 P. L. W. 425; 21 C. W. N. 345; 5 L. W. 711; 21 M. L. T. 344; 15 A. L. J. 382; 25 C. L. J. 508; 19 Bom. L. R. 424; (1917) M. W. N. 473; 44 C. 662 242

JURISDICTION, irregular exercise of.

Where a Court is properly seized of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit and of the parties, orders passed in violation of the provisions of law regulating the further proceedings in the suit in relation to the subject-matter till the termination of the suit cannot be said to be so totally without jurisdiction as to render them nullities. Such an order can only amount to a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. M THULJARAM ROW v. GOPALA AIYAR, (1917) M. W. N. 234; 21 M. L. T. 229; 23 M. L. J. 431. 611

JURISDICTION—concl'd.

—Objection, when to be taken.

Where in a case which a Court is competent to try, the parties, without objection, join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute the jurisdiction of the Court upon the ground that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to dismissal of the suit. PAT MOHAN KRISHNA DAR v. HAR PRASAD 2 —of caste panchayat, whether subject to control of Civil Courts.

The question of the power of the Civil Courts to control the jurisdiction of caste bodies purporting to ex-communicate or censure caste offenders discussed but not decided. P C GOVIND DAS v. BISHAMBHAR DAS, 15 A. L. J. 629; 33 M. L. J. 103; 2 P. L. W. 125; 21 C. W. N. 1113; 19 Bom. L. R. 707; 22 M. L. T. 132; 26 C. L. J. 282; 6 L. W. 494 641

LAMBARDAR, power of, to grant leases.—Co-sharers, rights of.—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of.

Where the wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that before granting leases of vacant lands the lambardar should consult the co-sharers of the village:

Held, that the co-sharers could not claim to avoid a bona fide lease merely on the ground that their wishes were not consulted before it was given. N HARIPRASAD v. GOVINDRAO, 13 N. L. R. 96 542

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I of 1894), Ss. 9, 25—

Failure to make claim for compensation, effect of—District Judge, power of—Compensation—Interest, whether should be awarded.

Where an appellant omits to make a claim within the meaning of section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act, the District Judge is justified in refusing to award anything more than the amount awarded by the Collector under section 25 of the Act.

Interest should be allowed on compensation awarded under the Land Acquisition Act, unless there is special reason to the contrary. A RAM PRASAD v. COLLECTOR OF ALIGARH 274

—S. 9, CL. (3) —“To the same effect”, meaning of—Notice—Time, whether allowable.

The words “to the same effect” in clause (3) of section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act mean that the second notice should have the same matters mentioned in it including the time, as are mentioned in the first notice.

Therefore, in the second notice under clause (3) of section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act to the occupier of the land 15 days should also be allowed to enable the occupier to make his objections. A KRISHNA SAH v. COLLECTOR OF BAREILLY, 15 A. L. J. 450 76

—S. 18, SUB-S. 2, CL. (6)—Reference of Collector—Limitation.

Where before the date of the award, the Collector having passed an order that the party should go to the Civil Court, the Mukhtear of the party ceased to take any further part in the proceedings before the Collector and a reference was made more than six weeks after but within six months of the award:

Held, that the reference was within time under section 18 (2) (6) of the Land Acquisition Act. C MAHENDRA CHANDRA DATTA v. ABHOY CHARAN SARMA 355

—S. 25 274

LAND REVENUE in Bengal and Bihar, date of payment of—Arrear, non-payment of, effect of—Sale of estate.

In Bengal and Bihar the sum of land revenue due for Chait-Paisakh kist becomes payable on the last day of Baisakh which ordinarily falls between the 1st and 15th of May, from which date it becomes an “arrear,” and if this arrear is not paid by the date fixed by the Board of Revenue as the latest date of payment the estate becomes immediately liable to sale. PAT BHIRUKHI OJHA v. RAJBANSI KUER, 2 P. L. W. 31 638

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Barga kabuliyat, construction of—Tenant, whether bound to pay stipulated sum as value of crops or their market-value—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Construction of document—Motive of parties, how far relevant.

A Court cannot ignore the plain terms of a contract merely because they appear to be unreasonable. If the terms are clear and unambiguous, the Court is bound to give effect to them without stopping to consider how far they may be reasonable or otherwise.

Where a barga kabuliyat (which was headed “value of the crops mentioned in the barga kabuliyat is Rs. 25”) provided that a half share of the crops raised on the land shall be made over to the landlord and the tenant shall cultivate, sow and weed and do other things for cultivating and if he does not cultivate, the landlord’s share of the crops will be determined by reference to the crops raised on the neighbouring fields and if the tenant fails to deliver the said crops to the landlord, he shall pay Rs. 25 per annum to the landlord on account of, the value of the crops and if he does not do so the landlord shall be entitled to realise the same by instituting a suit in Court:

Held, (1) that under the terms of the kabuliyat, the tenant, if he neglected to deliver to his landlord crops according to the terms of the instrument, became liable to pay Rs. 25 per annum on account of the value thereof and not their market-value;

(2) that under section 92 of the Evidence Act, no oral evidence was admissible to show that the clause about the payment of Rs. 25 was inserted solely for the purposes of registration of the document, as it was not so stated on the face of the instrument itself. C BASIRUDDI v. AFSARANNESSA BIBI, 21 C. W. N. 860 833

—Bhaoli danabandi tenant, right of, to remove crop.

A bhaoli danabandi tenant can remove the crop either to the threshing floor or to his house, provided he does so in due course of husbandary. But before he cuts his crop he must give the landlord reasonable opportunity of appraising it. PAT EMPEROR v. LALU GOPE, 1 P. L. W. 691; 18 Cr. L. J. 697 335 —Construction of document—Kabuliyat—Agreement to deliver half produce or pay fixed sum—Landlord’s right to insist upon half produce.

A barga kabuliyat executed by the tenant-defendant provided that the tenant shall deliver every year at the house of the plaintiff at the proper time a moiety share, after measurement, of whatever crops are grown on the land and if the tenant does not deliver the same, then the landlord will be competent to realise a sum of Rs. 40 on account of value thereof by filing a law suit; and it further provided that if through default of the tenant in properly carrying on the cultivation, good crops are not grown, then the tenant shall deliver without objection such quantity of crops as would be in proportion to the output of the neighbouring lands:

LANDLORD AND TENANT—contd.

Held, that the landlord was entitled to recover the value of half the crops raised on the land and was not bound to accept the sum of Rs. 40 as its equivalent. C KALI KANTA DAS v. MOHESH CHANDRA KANTA 836

— Co-sharer landlord, right of, to recover his share of rent by suit.

A co-sharer-landlord can by a suit recover his share of the rent when there has been separate collection in respect of that share. C MOHENDRA NATH MADAK v. PARESH CHANDRA GHOSH 506 — Covenant by tenant not to transfer his interest, enforceability of.

Where there is no condition of forfeiture in a lease, a covenant by the tenant not to transfer his interest cannot restrain the latter from transferring the same, unless proper conditions are put in for enforcing the rights of the landlord on a breach of the covenant. C ANNODA CHARAN NAYA v. DASARATH HALDAR 444

— Decision in rent suit that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant—Suit for khas possession by landlord—Res judicata 659

— Ejectment of under-raiyat on expiry of term of kabuliyat—Stipulation for second settlement—Under-raiyat not expressing willingness to carry out stipulation, consequence of—Pleadings—Time, whether of essence of contract.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff, a raiyat, to eject the defendant, an under-raiyat, on the expiry of the term of his kabuliyat which contained a condition to the effect that on the expiry of the term of the lease the tenant shall take a second settlement and unless he does so he shall have no interest in the land, the defendant pleaded that the kabuliyat was improperly obtained from him by the plaintiff and he was, therefore, not bound by the terms thereof, but he did not say that he was willing to take a fresh settlement nor did he express such willingness until after the close of the evidence and apparently when the case was being argued:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for ejectment when it was found that the terms of the kabuliyat were binding upon the defendant and that the defendant was not entitled to plead an equitable defence against the plaintiff's right to possess the land, as he never pleaded that he was ever ready and willing to take a second settlement and did not prove that he was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract.

In a case of this nature, time is not of the essence of the contract unless it is made so. C RAHMATULLA SHEIKH v. ISABUDDIN SARKAR 616

— Kabuliyat, construction of—Tenure, nature of—Heritable and permanent—Burden of proof.
A permanent tenure may bear a variable rent.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—contd.

Per Richardson, J.—Quare.—Whether a non-transferable tenure can be a permanent tenure?

Per Walmsley, J.—The descent of a tenancy from father to son and then to the son's widow is not enough to establish that the tenancy is heritable.

A tenant who claims an hereditary right under a lease which does not contain the words "from generation to generation" has a heavy onus to discharge.

The right of alienation though not an essential feature of a permanent tenure, is commonly regarded as an invariable incident.

Per Curiam.—Where a tenancy was held for a long time and for a period of 70 years out of it only four kabuliyats were executed and the tenancy descended from father to son and then to the son's widow, but the kabuliyats bound the tenant to keep the trees intact and restrained him from making any transfer or partition of the lands and there were no words of heritability in the kabuliyats:

Held, that the tenancy was a non-permanent tenure. C PRODYOT COOMAR TAGORE v. KRISHNA-MONI DASIA, 21 C. W. N. 809 513

— Lease by Government for 99 years—Covenant not to do any act 'which may grow to the detriment or annoyance' of existing tenants—Permanent occupancy rights, implication of—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 90—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 43—Tenancy by estoppel, when created—Contemporanea expositio, doctrine of, applicability of.

The doctrine of contemporanea expositio must be restricted to the acts and conduct of the grantor beginning contemporaneously with the grant and continued for a long course of years and should not be extended to acts and conduct done, say, 40 years after the date of grant.

Government, which absolutely owned certain lands, leased them to the plaintiffs. On the date of the lease, there were tenants already on the land. One of the terms of the lease which the plaintiffs obtained on renewal and on which date the tenants claimed permanent rights of occupancy) was that the lessees will not do any act "which may grow to the grievance or damage of the Government of India or the Government of Madras or their tenants." Subsequent to the grant, one of the grantees described himself as a mirasidar in the pattas granted to the tenants and 11 years before the renewed lease one of the lessees recognised the right of permanent occupancy in the tenants and issued pattas in recognition thereof:

Held, that this covenant was the usual one in English indentures creating leases by which the lessor protects himself against the acts of his lessees which might injure other tenants of his, and could not be construed as conferring permanent rights of occupancy on tenants in the occupation of the land.

Held, also, that it could not be said in the circumstances of this case that the plaintiffs represented themselves as acting on behalf of these tenants also or ever did represent these tenants when or before they obtained a renewal of the lease from Government and that in such circumstances they could not be presumed to have secured an advantage which they must hold for the benefit of the tenants as trustees under section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—contd.

Where land really belongs to Government, no question of estoppel and no question under section 43 of Act IV of 1882 arise so as to interfere with the rights of the subsequent grantee from the Government.

A tenancy by estoppel cannot be created where the act of the landlord which is relied upon and which created a lesser right than the landlord represented himself to be entitled to create, did confer upon the tenant a right as lessee for some term, however short. M SWAMINATHA MUDALI v. SARAVANA MUDALI, 33 M. L. J. 370 581

—Lease, construction of—Agreement not to vary rent until actual measurement—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 52, applicability of.

Where by a permanent lease, a piece of land described as a plot of one thousand bighas, then in jungly state, was let out rent free for six years and thereafter at a progressive rent rising to 8 annas per bigha, and the lease provided that the tenant shall pay Rs. 500 every year, and after the rent-free period and the period of progressive rents were over, on a measurement being made....., for land found to be in excess the tenants should pay additional rent at the above rate from the time of the measurement and should from that time get an abatement at the above rate for land which was found to be less, and the tenant or his heirs or successors should never have to pay any additional jama for the above lands, and the landlord or his heirs and successors should never receive or be entitled to receive any additional jama:

Held, (1) that upon a proper construction of the lease what was demised was the land lying within the boundaries mentioned in the schedule to the lease at Rs. 500 per annum, with an option to the tenant or the landlord to have an actual measurement made of the land, and until that was done the rent was fixed at Rs. 500 per annum;

(2) that section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply because the lease was a permanent one, but that when the measurement would be actually made the tenant or the landlord would get the benefit of section 52 according as the measurement showed the land to be less or more than one thousand bighas. C RAJ KUMAR MISSRA v. RAMA NATH SINGHA 494

—Lease—Lessee, holding over, whether bound by conditions of lease—Thekadar, position of—Ejectment without landlord's consent, whether permissible—Tenant, knowledge of.

A lessee holding over after the expiration of the lease is bound by the conditions of the lease.

A thekadar cannot issue a notice of ejectment without his landlord's permission, if his powers are in that respect restricted under the terms of the theka, irrespective of the fact whether or not such restriction is known to the tenants. U P B R PARMESHA DAT v. BISHESHAR, 4 O. L. J. 146 41

—Lease, permanent, by head of mutt, validity of—Suit for possession by successor of matadhi-pathi—Adverse possession, plea of. 531

LANDLORD AND TENANT—contd.

—Mokhasa holding—Rent—Co-sharer tenants, liability of, nature of—Fractional sharer, right of, to pay proportional rent—Burden of proof—Kattubadi, suit for—Interest on arrears, claim for—Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865), s. 37—Rent payable by instalments—Limitation—Receipt for payment of rent, form of—Evidence.

The liability of co-sharer tenants in a mokhasa holding to pay rent to the landlord is joint and several.

The onus of proving that the landlord, by his conduct, treated each fractional sharer as liable only for a proportionate share of the rent, and released each of the fractional sharers from liability for the rest of the mokhasa kattubadi rent lies on the party setting it up.

The release of one or more of joint obligees of his or their liability in one year cannot affect their joint and several liability for the rents of the subsequent years unless there has been a contract as between the landlord and all the joint tenants to divide a joint holding and the total rent in definite shares or unless there have been several such agreements between the landlord and each of the several joint tenants by which the landlord relinquished his right to proceed against that tenant in all future years for more than a particular fraction of the total rent.

The party, therefore, who sets up that the joint and several liability which once existed has been split up so as to oblige the lessor to sue the separate sharers for only specific fractions of the rent, ought to prove by cogent evidence the number of shares into which the holding was put up and the definite rent payable by each such sharer and the agreement of the landlord to substitute several liabilities for the original joint and several liability.

Section 37 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865) which provides for interest at 12 per cent. per annum on arrears of rent due, is applicable to claims for rent of the nature of kattubadi.

In a suit for kattubadi brought before the Madras Estates Land Act came into force, the relation between the parties is governed by the Madras Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865, and the landlord is entitled to interest on arrears at 12 per cent. per annum till date of suit.

The decree should provide for subsequent interest at 6 per cent.

A landlord cannot stipulate with his tenant that only a particular form of receipt for payment would be accepted if tendered as evidence in Court.

Where rent for a particular fasli is payable in instalments, the cause of action for rent due for that fasli accrues only from the date on which the last instalment becomes due. M PENUMETSA BAPIRAJU v. GOPSETTI NARAYANASWAMI NAIDU 590

—Mortgagee of lease-hold interest, liability of, for rent to lessor—Privity of estate—Privity of contract—Sub-lessees, rights and liabilities of 841

Non-transferable occupancy holding—Purchaser in execution of money-decree not recognized by landlord—Suit for recovery of possession by purchaser against another purchaser recognized by landlord.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—contd.

Plaintiff, who had purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money-decree but had not been recognized as a tenant by the landlord, brought a suit to recover his possession from the defendant, who was in possession under a fictitious purchase from the widow of the ryot and who was accepted and treated by the landlord as a tenant:

Held, that the plaintiff could not get a decree against the defendant, as the latter had been accepted and treated by the landlord as the tenant and that such treatment amounted to a settlement. C JANAKI NATH SAHA v. KAILASH CHANDRA SINGHA —Occupancy tenant, whether can relinquish rights without relinquishing land.

498

An occupancy tenant cannot, without relinquishing the land, relinquish his rights as occupancy tenant in the land and still remain a tenant under some other tenure. U P B R SHANKAR KHAN DAT PURI v. SHEO SINGH, 4 O. L. J. 158 —Permanent tenure—Registered lease, necessity of.

48

A permanent tenure cannot be created under the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other Act except by a registered instrument, even where the land is agricultural land situate outside a town and let out for the purpose of growing thatching grass.

Therefore, a person who enters upon land as a tenant, cannot set up a permanent tenure unless his lease is registered in accordance with law. C HASISWARI DEBI v. HARI NATH —Purchaser of lessee's interest, liability of, to pay interest stipulated in lease—Interest on arrears of rent, whether payable down to date of decree in rent suit

100

768

—Purchaser at revenue sale—Sale set aside—Purchaser, right of, to recover rent.

A purchaser of an ijmali share of an estate at a revenue sale, which is subsequently set aside at the instance of the original proprietors, is nevertheless entitled to realise rents from the tenants until the recovery of actual possession by the decree-holders. PAT ABDUL RAZZAK v. BAIJNATH GOENKA, 2 P. L. J. 383

426

—Rent payable partly in money and partly in paddy—Tenant, right of, to pay price of paddy—Construction of kabuliyat—Speculation, whether permissible.

Where a tenant agreed by a kabuliyat to pay rent partly in money and partly in paddy and on his failure to deliver the paddy, to pay a certain sum as the price thereof:

Held, that the kabuliyat gave a right to the tenant to pay rent partly in money and partly in paddy if he liked and if he did not like to deliver paddy, he could pay the rent altogether in money by paying the amount mentioned as its price; but that he was not liable, in default of delivering the paddy, to pay its market-value at the time of the default.

In such a case the right and liability of the tenant must depend upon the construction of the contract and the construction of the contract only, and a Court has no right to make any speculation as to whether the amount mentioned in the kabuliyat as the price of the paddy has been put in for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and the registration fee. C NILMADHAB MAHAPATRA v. KESHAB LAL MAHAPATRA, 26 C. L. J. 94 —Sale of portion of non-transferable occupancy holding—Surrender, subsequent—Landlord, right of, to eject purchaser.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—concl'd.

819

Per Chatterjee, J.—A tenant has no right to surrender a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding after he has transferred the same to a purchaser, and the landlord has no right to eject such purchaser on accepting such surrender.

Per Newbould, J.—A sale of a portion of a non-transferable holding does not create an incumbrance on the tenancy within the meaning of section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The position of a tenant of a holding not transferable without the landlord's consent is similar to that of an English tenant, who has made a covenant not to transfer.

Where a tenant after having transferred a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom, surrenders that portion to the landlord, and takes a new settlement of the remainder of the holding, his act operates in law as an implied relinquishment of the holding, so as to entitle the landlord to eject the purchaser of the portion. C ZAMIR MUNSHI v. BISSESWARI DEBIA, 25 C. L. J. 460

544 —Service tenure—Tenant refusing to perform service, consequences of 348

—Tenant paying rent to landlord after interest transferred Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 72—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 50.

A payment of rent by a tenant to his landlord after the latter's interest has been transferred is valid as against the transferee, unless the transferee has before the payment given notice of the transfer to the tenant, even though such payment is not made in good faith within the meaning of section 50 of the Transfer of Property Act. C JHARU CHARAN MAITY v. SRIDAM CHANDRA MAHAPATRA

655

—Varam tenure—Cesses claimable as rent, levy of, conditions of—Kangunam, levy of, legality of—Recognition of rights by Court—Subsequent non-enforcement—Abandonment, presumption of 159

LEASE—Duty of lessor to put lessee in possession—Notice to tenants, whether sufficient.

684

—Heritable rights—Lessee holding over, position of.

A lease was granted for thirty years at a fixed rent, which was to be increased at the end of the term if the revenue was increased. There was no mention whatever of hereditary rights:

Held, that the tenure created by the lease was not heritable except possibly for the unexpired period of the thirty years.

In the case of an ordinary lease for a term of years when the lessee is allowed to hold on after the lease has come to a conclusion, the result is not that he is to hold on for his lifetime but he is merely treated as holding from year to year. U P B R RAMESHAR v. ABBAS ALI KHAN, 4 O. L. J. 191

116

LEASE—concl'd.

— Purchaser of lessee's interest, liability of, to pay interest stipulated in lease—Interest on arrears of rent, whether payable down to date of decree in rent suit.

The purchaser of a leasehold is bound to pay interest on the rent falling into arrears at the rate stipulated in the contract of lease. The contractual rate ought to be allowed by the Court from the date of institution of the suit down to the date of the decree. C AMULYA CHANDRA ROY v. SHIVA KRISHNA BOSE 768

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS, duty of, in accepting professional engagements.

In modern times the tendency is to expect from the legal profession a greater amount of care and conscience in accepting engagements than was done in the days of Lord Erskine or Lord Brougham. M NAGANATHA SASTRI v. SUBRAMANIA IYER, 32 M. L. J. 392; 5 L. W. 594; 21 M. L. T. 324 126

LETTERS PATENT, (MAD.), S. 15—High Court, interference by, with order under s. 147, Criminal Procedure Code 715

LIBEL—Caste dispute—Panchayat, resolution of, publication of—Privilege, whether destroyed by irregularity in passing resolution.

B., the chowdhri or chairman of a caste panchayat, circulated to the other members of the caste a resolution of the panchayat suspending social relations with G.'s family. In an action for libel brought by G. against B. it was contended that G. had no proper notice of the meeting of the panchayat and that in consequence the passing of the resolution was contrary to natural justice, and B. was not privileged in publishing it. It was found that the notice was duly given:

Held, that B.'s privilege was not affected or rebutted by any defect in the notice to G.

To defeat or rebut privilege, the law does not recognise anything short of actual or express malice in the publication of the matter which is charged to be libellous. P C GOBIND DAS v. BISHAMBAR DAS, 15 A. L. J. 629; 33 M. L. J. 103; 2 P. L. W. 125; 21 C. W. N. 1112; 19 Bom. L. R. 77; 22 M. L. T. 132; 26 C. L. J. 282; 6 L. W. 494 641

LICENSE—Licensee denying licensor's title—Forfeiture.

A licensee in possession does not, like a tenant, by denying the title of the grantor of the license, forfeit the license and become liable to immediate ejectment. A AKBAR ALI KHAN v. SHAH MUHAMMAD, 15 A. L. J. 592 443

LIMITATION—Construction of document—Bond authorising suit on default of payment of yearly interest or of principal after fixed period—Suit for principal sum—Cause of action 229

— Suit for accounts against administrator 860

LIMITATION ACT (XV OF 1877), S. 2, SCH. II, ARTS. 142, 144—Dispossession—Exclusive adverse possession.

The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term "dispossession", but its meaning is well settled. A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively it continues until he is dispossessed, and upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives.

LIMITATION ACT (1877)—concl'd.

There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment. Similarly there can be no continuance of adverse possession, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession continues until there is fresh dispossession and revives as it ceases. P C BASANTA KUMAR ROY v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 32 M. L. J. 305; 21 C. W. N. 642; 15 A. L. J. 398; 1 P. L. W. 593; 25 C. L. J. 487; 19 Bom. L. R. 480; (1917) M. W. N. 482; 6 L. W. 117; 22 M. L. T. 310 337

LIMITATION ACT (IX OF 1908), S. 3 358

— S. 3—Limitation, question of, whether can be raised at any stage—Court, duty of.

The question of limitation can by law be raised at any stage of the proceedings and it is always a Court's duty, whether it is raised or not, to see whether the claim is barred. PAT ANAGRAHIT RAM v. SITARAM DAS 661

— S. 5—Bona fide mistake—Extension of time.

If a man chooses to adopt his own methods of calculation and files his appeal on the last possible day according to that method, he has only himself to thank if his method of calculation is erroneous. N SALAMSINGH v. HIRA, 13 N. L. R. 89 425 — Ss. 6, 7—Statutory bar, effect of—Extinction of right—Bar against adult brother, when affects minor under disability—Scope and applicability of s. 7.

Section 7 of the Limitation Act contemplates the existence in two or more persons of a joint right and a joint cause or causes of action in support of a single suit. Where two brothers have got the same cause of action (that is, where all the material allegations giving rise to a right of suit are the same), where the whole right litigated and the nature of the entire claim litigated are the same, and where, under such circumstances, the elder brother could institute a suit for himself and his younger brother on that joint right and joint cause of action, section 7 would become applicable and would bar the younger brother's right when the elder brother's became barred. The mere fact, however, that, under Order I, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, a person suing for himself and praying for one particular remedy could have joined in that suit another cause of action vesting in his minor brother for whom he could have acted as next friend will not bring the suit within the ambit of the section. M KANDASAMI NAICKEN v. IRUSAPPA NAICKEN, 33 M. L. J. 113; 6 L. W. 126; 22 M. L. T. 163; (1917) M. W. N. 589 664

— S. 10—Administrator, whether trustee.

An administrator in whom no special trust is vested for a specific purpose is not a trustee within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act. PAT JANARDHAN PRASAD v. JANKIBATI THAKURAIN 860

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—contd.

— S. 10 — “Assign for valuable consideration.”

A purchaser in Court auction is an “assign for valuable consideration” within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act, although he knows he is purchasing trust properties in which his alienor has only a limited interest.

The omission of the words ‘good faith’ from section 10 of the Limitation Acts of 1877 and 1908 is a clear indication that an “assign for valuable consideration” under that section need not have acted in “good faith”; it is enough if he pays valuable consideration. That intention is also clear from Article 134 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. That Article does not apply to the case of a purchaser in Court auction. M SUBBAIYA PANDARAM v. MAHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARACAYAR, 21 M. L. T. 62; 5 L. W. 690; 32 M. L. J. 85 50

— S. 10, SCH. I, ART. 134 531

— Ss. 12, 5—Time requisite for obtaining copies — Application on day of delivery of judgment—

Exclusion of day twice over, whether permissible—

Bona fide mistake.

Where copies of a decree and judgment are applied for on the same day on which judgment is pronounced, the appellant is entitled to exclude that day from the period of limitation only once, as the day on which judgment is pronounced.

The period of limitation, with reference to the provision as regards time for obtaining copies, means the period of limitation beginning to run from the day after the delivery of judgment, and, therefore, no portion of time previous to this period can be deducted as time requisite for obtaining copies. N SALAMSINGH v. HIRA, 13 N. L. R. 89 425

— S. 14—Suit filed in wrong Court—Good faith—Limitation, saving of.

A suit which ought to have been filed in the Court of Small Causes was filed in the Court of a Munsif and the munsarim of that Court certified that the plaint was one within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsif. A few days afterwards the Munsif transferred the case to another Court which decreed the suit ex parte. On an application by the defendant the ex parte decree was set aside and on trial of the suit the Munsif returned the plaint to be filed in the proper Court, as the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to try it. The plaint was filed in the Small Cause Court next day and the plaintiff was met with a plea of limitation:

Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff had acted throughout in good faith he was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act. A FORD AND MACDONALD, LTD. v. MEYER, 15 A. L. J. 573 447

— S. 15—Attachment of decree before judgment, whether stay of execution.

An attachment before judgment is not an injunction or order staying execution within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act, no matter whether the subject-matter of the attachment is a decree or any other property. C MUNSUR ALI v. ARHOYA CHARAN DAS, 21 C. W. N. 1147 816

— S. 18, SCH. I, ART. 62—Fraud, effect of—Limitation.

The period of limitation for the recovery of money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received for his use is three years from the date when the money was received. But if the knowledge of the plaintiff's right to institute the suit has been kept from him by the fraud of the defendant, under section 18 of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation runs from the date when the fraud first becomes known to the plaintiff. A LAKHPAT PANDAY v. JANG BAHADUR PANDAY 37

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—contd.

— S. 20—Payment of principal by guardian for benefit of minor—Minor, liability of.

Where a payment of money due under a mortgage bond is made by the de facto guardian of a minor in order to avoid the immediate bringing of a suit on the bond against the minor, the period of limitation is extended under section 20 of the Limitation Act as against the minor. PAT GITA PROSAD SINGH v. RAGHO SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 777 809

— S. 21 (b)—Part-payment—Payment of interest by one heir, whether binds other heirs.

Payment of interest by one of his heirs on a debt due by a deceased person does not save limitation as against the other heirs. L B YAGAPPA CHETTY v. MAHOMED 858

— S. 28—Bar of limitation—Extinction of debt.

The provisions of the Limitation Act should be construed strictly. Limitation is not extinction and the bar created by it does not operate to discharge a debt except in the particular circumstances of section 28. M NATHAMUNI PILLAI v. VENGAMMAL, 5 L. W. 593 358

— SCH. I, ARTS. 44, 144, Ss. 6, 7, 28—Guardian and ward—Alienation by guardian, suit for cancellation of, and possession—Article applicable to suit—Statutory bar, effect of—Extinction of right—Bar against adult brother, when affects minor under disability—Scope and applicability of s. 7—Alienee, claim of prescriptive title by—Child in womb, rights of—Hindu Law—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 1—Non-joinder of minor brother in suit to set aside alienation, effect of.

An alienation by a guardian ought to be set aside by a ward by instituting a suit within the period mentioned in Article 44 of the Limitation Act and till it is so set aside, the title vests in the alienee.

Though Article 44 describes the suit to be brought by the ward as a suit merely to set aside the transfer of his property by his guardian, if the transferee has obtained and is in possession and the ward has, therefore, to add a prayer for possession, Article 44 alone still applies to the suit, though it is brought for both reliefs.

On failure of the ward to sue to set aside the alienation within 3 years of his attaining majority under Article 44 of the Limitation Act, his right to the property is wholly extinguished under section 28 of the Act and title vests exclusively in the alienee from that date.

A person whose right to set aside an alienation is barred under Article 44 cannot avoid it as defendant by denouncing it in a suit for possession brought by the alienee

Plaintiff purchased certain lands from the mother of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in 1893. The vendor described herself in the sale-deed as the guardian of the 2nd defendant alone, who was then 8 years old. The 3rd defendant was in her womb at the time.

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—contd.

The 2nd defendant sold the same lands to the 1st defendant in 1903 himself and as guardian of his minor brother, the 3rd defendant. The plaintiff was in possession till 1903, when he was forcibly ejected by the 1st defendant. Plaintiff brought the present suit in July 1912 for recovery of the properties from 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant attained majority in 1903 and the 3rd defendant attained majority about the end of 1911:

Held, (1) that as the 2nd defendant's right to sue to set aside the alienation by his mother became barred in 1906, the title vested in the plaintiff and 1st defendant, who acquired no title by his purchase, could not oust the plaintiff and that plaintiff was entitled to 2nd defendant's share in the property;

(2) that as the 3rd defendant was in his mother's womb at the date of sale to plaintiff and the mother did not act as his guardian, the 3rd defendant's rights were not transferred to plaintiff, who could not claim a title by adverse possession;

(3) that 3rd defendant's right to the property was not extinguished by reason of the 2nd defendant having been barred under section 7 of the Limitation Act, as the interests of the 2nd and 3rd defendants were split up by the sale to plaintiff and were not identical. M KANDASAMI NAICKEN v. KRUSAPPA NAICKEN, 23 M. L. J. 309 664

— SCH. I, ART. 44—Joint family—Alienation—Suit by minor member to declare alienation invalid—Limitation.

Article 44 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act has no application to a suit by a minor member of a joint undivided Hindu family on attainment of majority to declare that an alienation made by his natural guardian is not valid and is not binding upon him. M APPANNA PRASADA PANDA v. APPANNA MAHAPATRO, 5 L. W. 374 145

— ARTS. 44, 144—Joint Hindu family—Alienation by manager of minor co-parcener's property, describing himself as minor's guardian—Suit for possession after majority, nature of—Guardian and ward—Limitation.

Article 44, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act applies to cases in which a person acts as a guardian of a minor in respect of property in which he has individual rights of ownership.

A suit by a member of a joint Hindu family for possession of property alienated by the manager during the plaintiff's minority describing himself as the guardian of the minor, is not a suit to set aside a sale by a guardian to which Article 44 of the Limitation Act applies, but is one for possession of immoveable property within the meaning of Article 144. M THIRUPATHI RAJU v. VENKATARAJU 418

— ART. 62, applicability of.

Article 62 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, even where the defendant at the time when he received the money did not intend to pay it to the plaintiff.

The operation of the Article is attracted, if it is established that the money received by the defendant is money which belongs to the plaintiff, and is repayable to him in justice, equity and good conscience. C BINODE LAL v. PREO NATH 173

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—contd.

— SCH. I, ART. 62, applicability of—Suit by one brother against another for partition of cash left by their father.

Article 62 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a claim for a share of the cash forming part of the estate to be divided between co-heirs. P MUHAMMAD HAMID ULLAH KHAN v. MUHAMMAD MAJID ULLAH KHAN 374 — ARTS. 64, 89, 115—Suit for recovery of money found due on accounts taken and adjusted—Limitation—"Moveable property", whether includes money.

Where the accounts of an agent have been taken and adjusted and a specific sum has been found due from the agent to the principal, the principal becomes entitled to sue forthwith for its recovery and the position is not altered, even if the agent continues thereafter to hold his office as agent of that principal. A suit of this description falls under Article 64 or Article 115 of the Limitation Act.

Where accounts have been rendered by an agent, Article 89 of the Limitation Act has no application to a suit by the principal against the agent for recovery of money found due on such accounts, as the suit contemplated by Article 89 is a suit in which accounts have to be taken. C KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. SARWAN LAL, 25 C. L. J. 335; 21 C. W. N. 591 359

— ART. 68—Bond, suit on—Condition, breach of—Limitation 235

— ART. 89—"Moveable property," whether includes money.

The expression "moveable property" in Article 89 of the Limitation Act includes money. C KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. SARWAN LAL, 25 C. L. J. 335; 21 C. W. N. 591 359

— ARTS. 97, 62—Earnest money, suit for, on contract for sale of land—Limitation.

A suit for the recovery of an advance paid under a contract for sale of land on the Court's refusal to decree specific performance is governed by Article 97, and not by Article 62 of the Limitation Act. M BOMMANABOYINA KOTINAGULU v. RAMARAJU ANKAYYA, 6 L. W. 44; (1917) M. W. N. 447 893

— ART. 115—Suit for recovery of money found due on accounts taken and adjusted 359

— ART. 116 594

— ART. 120 627

— ART. 125—Mortgage forming consideration for sale, suit in respect of.

A widow mortgaged certain lands of her husband by way of conditional sale in 1891. In 1901 she sold the land to the mortgagee in consideration of the mortgage money. More than twelve years after 1891 plaintiffs, as reversioners of the last male holder, sued for a declaration that the sale shall not affect their reversionary rights:

Held, (1) that the suit as regards the validity of the mortgage was barred under Article 125 of the Limitation Act, having been brought more than twelve years after the execution of the mortgage;

(2) that the mortgagee having failed to take proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806, there was no necessity for the widow to convert the mortgage into a sale. P RAJINDRA SINGH v. ABDUL GHANI, 25 P. R. 1917 63

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—contd.

— SCH. I, ART. 131, scope of.

Article 131 of the Limitation Act means no more than this that if a party entitled to claim malikana is refused the enjoyment of his right after demand, he must establish his right by suit brought within twelve years from the date of such refusal. The Article does not apply where the plaintiff has already in a former suit obtained a decree declaratory of his title. PAT SAIYIDUDDIN v. AVADH BEHARI SINGH, 2 P. L. W. 64 864

— ART. 134, applicability of.

So long as the legal title is transferred to the purchaser and possession given to him, whether such title is transferred by virtue of the legal estate vesting in the trustee or mortgagee or by virtue of a special power, the transferee can take advantage of Article 134. So far as alienation of trust property is concerned there is no distinction between a private trust and a charity. M SUBBAIYA PANDARAM v. MAHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARACAYAR, 21 M. L. T. 62; 5 L. W. 690; 32 M. L. T. 85 50

— ART. 138—Possession, suit for, by execution purchaser—Land purchased in possession of third persons—Limitation.

The purchaser of a land at a sale in execution of a decree cannot, by bringing a suit for its possession within twelve years from the date of sale, save his claim from the bar of limitation, where the land purchased has been in the possession, not of the judgment-debtor, but of the defendants, from before the date of the sale and for a period of more than twelve years under an independent title. C ABDUL MAJID MIAN v. BAKHSHA ALI 662

— ART. 142 13

— ARTS. 142, 144—Adverse possession—Abadi in agricultural mahal—Burden of proof.

If a person occupying a portion of the abadi in a purely agricultural mahal raises the defence of adverse possession, the burden of proving that possession lies very heavily on him and he cannot rid himself of that burden by saying that the zemindar has not shown that he has been in possession within twelve years next preceding the suit. A SHAMBHU NATH v. HARI RAM 97

— ARTS. 142—Possession, suit for—Limitation.

A plaintiff in a suit for possession has to show title and where it is alleged that he is out of possession, he must show affirmatively that he has been in possession within twelve years of the suit. A CHAMPA LAL v. MANGAL CHAND 420

— ART. 144, 44—Joint Hindu family—Alienation by manager of minor co-parcener's property, describing himself as minor's guardian—Suit for possession after majority, nature of—Guardian and ward—Limitation 418

— ART. 168—Application for re-admission, limitation for.

Even if Article 168 of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application for the restoration of an appeal dismissed under rule 10, Order XLJ, Civil Procedure Code, such an application ought to be made within a reasonable time and ordinarily would be too late if made after thirty days from the date of dismissal. C GOLJAN BIBI v. NAFAR ALI 234

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—concl'd.

— SCH. I, ART. 177 1006

— ART. 181—Instalment decree—Default—Application for final decree—Limitation 424

— ARTS. 182, 183 608

— ART 182—Execution—Decree, ex parte, satisfaction of, against one judgment-debtor—Decree set aside as against that judgment-debtor—Application for execution—Limitation.

When an ex parte decree which has been executed against one of the judgment-debtors is set aside in a suit by that judgment-debtor and the money realised in execution is ordered to be refunded, a further application of the decree-holder, on the date on which the ex parte decree is set aside, to execute the decree against the other judgment-debtor must be treated as a continuation of the original application for execution which was made within time. C KERAMAT ALI v. NAGENDRA KISHORE ROY, 21 C. W. N. 571 78

— ART. 182, CL. (5)—Step-in-aid of execution—Application for summoning witnesses as to standard of measurement.

During the pendency of a substantial application for execution of a decree for possession of certain property, an application made by the decree-holder for summoning witnesses for the purpose of determining the standard of measurement without which he could not, in the opinion of the Court, obtain execution of the decree by delivery of possession, is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act. C KEDAR NATH DEY ROY v. LAKHI KANTA DEY, 21 C. W. N. 868; 26 C. L. J. 115 1005

MADRAS COURT OF WARDS ACT (I of 1902), Ss. 37, 38, 41—Scope of s. 41—"Shall not be paid before other pecuniary claims", meaning of—Omission to notify under s. 41, effect of—Notification by part owner of entire claim under s. 37, whether can be availed of by other part owner.

A person having pecuniary claims against an estate under the management of the Court of Wards must himself notify the same to the Collector and cannot rely upon a notification made by a person having an interest only in a part of that claim.

Section 37 of the Court of Wards Act does not recognize the notification of a claim by any person except the claimant or a person empowered by him.

The cessation of interest under section 41 continues even after the release of the estate to the ward, unless the same is subsequently revived by act of parties.

Per Oldfield, J.—The language of section 41 of the Court of Wards Act, when interpreted with reference to other sections of the Act, makes it perfectly clear that the tenure of the Court of Wards Act is intended to affect the estate permanently, not only directly in respect of debts actually discharged, but in certain circumstances indirectly by reducing the amount of debts still due when the Court's tenure ends.

Section 41 has the effect of postponing unnotified debts to those notified under section 38 (1) of the Act, even after the estate has been released from the Court of Wards and handed over to the zemindar.

MADRAS COURT OF WARDS ACT—concl'd.

Per Krishnan, J., (dissenting).—Section 41 of the Court of Wards Act cannot possibly continue to apply to an estate which has been freed from the control of the Court of Wards and to which the Act itself has ceased to apply. The question whether the disabilities once imposed on any particular creditor by the application of the section continue to have effect even after such application has ceased, depends upon the character of the disability, whether it is necessarily of a permanent character or is only of a temporary one.

The words "shall not be paid until after the discharge or satisfaction of the claims notified or admitted under section 38" in section 41 of the Act merely prescribe an order of priority to be followed in payment of certain debts but does not put an end to them; such an order can be availed of when the payment is made or demanded, only if it is in force at the time. It is worded in the form of an injunction not to pay until a certain thing is done and like other injunctions it can have effect only when it is in force, it has not any permanent effect.

The term "ward", wherever it occurs in the Court of Wards Act, is not applied to a person who was once a ward, but has ceased to be so.

A joint undivided Hindu family, one member of which was an insolvent, had as one of the assets of the family a mortgage-decree for a lakh of rupees against an estate under the management of the Court of Wards. One-twenty-fourth part of the decree debt passed to another person by assignment. He notified his claim to the Collector under section 41 of the Court of Wards Act but the holder of the mortgage-decree failed to notify his claim. The estate ceased to be under the management of the Court of Wards and the mortgaged villages were subsequently sold at the instance of a money-decree-holder and there were surplus sale-proceeds. The Official Assignee on behalf of the insolvent applied for execution of the mortgage-decree and for payment of the surplus sale-proceeds in execution of the mortgage-decree:

Held, Krishnan, J., (dissenting), that the omission to notify the mortgage-debt had not merely the effect of making the interest cease altogether, but also entirely postponed the payment of the debt until the other creditors who had notified their claims had been satisfied. M SRINIVASA RANGA ROW v. RAJAH OF KARVETNAGAR, 5 L. W. 725 811

MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT (I MAD. OF 1908);

S. 3 (2) (d)—Tanjore Palace Estate, whether 'estate' under the Act—Grants, irresumable, of land revenue only, whether 'estates'—'Inam', 'jagir', meaning of—Suits for rent due to Tanjore Palace—Jurisdiction.

The Tanjore Palace Estate, which is a grant by Government of land revenue alone to persons not owning the kudivaram right, is an 'estate' within the meaning of section 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act.

Section 3 (2) (d) of the Act does not exclude villages in the granted revenues of which the Government reserves no reversionary interest.

The word inam should not be given a restricted meaning and includes all jagirs and grants of a dignified character which for that reason are styled mokhasa and covering a number of villages in which Government do not claim a reversion.

MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT—cont'd.

Suits for rent due to the Tanjore Palace Estate under section 77 of the Act are cognizable by the Revenue Courts.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Clause (d) of section 3 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act restricts the operation of the Act by including only the inams therein mentioned, thereby excluding the so-called minor inams, but the definition as a whole clearly shows the general intention of the Legislature to include all large estates held directly under Government and clause (e) extends it to estates consisting of one or more villages not held directly under Government but as a permanent under-tenure.

All jagirs are a species of inams, though there are many kinds of inams that are not jagirs.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—When a Madras Statute uses the word 'inam', it does not signify a gift of whatever kind of property by a superior individual of whatever status to an inferior. M SUNDARAM AYYAR v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR, (1917) M. W. N. 362 975

Ss. 3 (5), 205—Board of Revenue, revisional powers of, extent of—Order refusing to recognise petitioner as landholder—Revision, whether lies 1007

— — S. 3 (11) 159

— — Ss. 3 (11), 143—Landlord and tenant—Varam tenure—Cesses claimable as rent, levy of, conditions of—Kanganam, levy of, legality of—Recognition of rights by Court—Subsequent non-enforcement—Abandonment, presumption of.

In considering whether the levy of particular cesses in a varam tenure must be disallowed under section 143 of the Madras Estates Land Act, a distinction must be made between fees which form part of the consideration for the ryot's holding and are leviable as incidental to the tenure and fees which by law or usage are payable in addition to the rent. For the former class of payments, the occupation of the land is the consideration, and, therefore, prima facie they are lawfully made.

Section 143 only applies to cesses which are additions to the rent. But if the fees claimed, instead of being cesses, are component parts of the rent by means of which the equality of varam is arrived at, the section will not apply.

A payment of fees claimed as rent for a series of years will not make them enforceable if they are not legally leviable. They will be payable if there is a valid, express or implied contract to pay. A contract cannot be implied where the payment is without consideration and is a voluntary one.

If a cess is shown to have been levied for a special purpose, there can be no implied contract to pay it after the purpose has ceased to exist, and payment of it will not thereafter be enforceable unless there is a fresh contract founded on a fresh consideration to continue the payment.

If a cess is otherwise valid, a contract to pay it can be implied from payments for a series of years or where it is the established usage or mamool of the estate to pay it.

MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT—contd.

The kanganam fee is a proper charge in addition to the rent and is legally leviable.

Per Krishnan, J—Rent proper does not include payments made merely in connection with the use of land and under a liability only incidental to such use. Every payment by a tenant as such to the landlord will ordinarily have reference to the use and occupation of the land, as that is the foundation of the relationship between the parties. But, unless a payment is directly in consideration for such use, it cannot fall under the first paragraph of clause 11 of section 3 of the Act.

Where rights which have been recognized by Courts are not enforced by the landlord for some years, that fact alone cannot affect the rights themselves or lead to an inference of the abandonment of his rights by the owner. M SUNDARAM IYER v. THEETHARAPPA MUDALIAR 159

S. 26 (3).

Section 26 (3) only gives the landlord the right to claim to revert to the old rate and compels the Collector, in a suit under section 56, to decree it. It is not in the power of the Court in a rent suit to cancel an existing patta, and, until that is done, it constitutes the contract between the parties. M SRINIVASA AIYANGAR v. MEDDAIKARA ABDUR RAHIM SAHIB, 6 L. W. 108; (1917) M. W. N. 584 82

Ss. 42 (2), 77 (1)—Increase in area, discovery of, on re-survey—Enhanced rent, suit for, maintainability of.

No suit lies for enhanced rent for an increase in the area of a holding discovered on re-survey except on an order of the Collector under section 42 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act. M SRINIVASA AIYANGAR v. MEDDAIKARA ABDUR RAHIM SAHIB, 6 L. W. 108; (1917) M. W. N. 584 82

Ss. 52 (3), 77—Plaint, presentation of, to Chief Ministerial Officer, legality of—Rent, rate of, fixed by decree under Act VIII of 1865—Suit, subsequent, under Act I of 1908—Decree as to rate, whether res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. IV, r. 1—S. 52 (3) of Act I of 1908, scope of.

Where Head Ministerial Officers of Revenue Courts are authorized to receive plaints, presentation to them is legal and proper under Madras Act I of 1908.

There is no reason for restricting the scope of the general reference to muchilikas decreed in section 52 (3) of the Act to those decreed by any particular description of Court. The unrestricted effect of the section is to recognize a relation which existed before the Act and to direct its continuance until it is terminated by the method, for which the Act provides.

A decree, therefore, of a Civil Court passed under the repealed Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865) fixing the rates of rent between landlord and tenant is res judicata in a subsequent suit between them where the rate is in question. M RADHAKRISHNA AIYAR v. SWAMINATHA AIYAR, 6 L. W. 46 87

MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT—concl'd.

S. 77

587

S. 192 (e)—Rent suit—Rent, reduction of, claim for, on ground of non-repair of irrigation works—Set-off, equitable, whether can be allowed in suit for rent.

Where the defendant (ryot), who had accepted a patta and had also executed a muchilika without objection agreeing to pay the rent claimed by the plaintiff, claimed a reduction on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to repair the well on the land and rendered him unable to raise the garden crops for the cultivation of which the rent had been fixed:

Held, that the defendant's plea for reduction of rent on the ground of failure of water supply was in the nature of an equitable set off, being in effect a claim for damages in respect of the contract to cultivate, and was, therefore, barred under section 192 (e) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908. MAD. VENA SUBBARAYULU NAIDU v. SUBBARAYALU NAIDU, 5 L. W. 708 238

Ss. 205, 3 (5)—Board of Revenue, revisional powers of, extent of—Order refusing to recognise petitioner as landholder—Revision, whether lies.

The revisional powers vested in the Board of Revenue by section 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act are subject to considerable limitations.

No revision lies to the Board of Revenue under section 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act against an order refusing to recognise the petitioner as a landholder under section 3 (5) of the Act. B R M SATAGOPA BHATTAR v. VENKU NAYUDU 1007

MADRAS RENT RECOVERY ACT (VIII of 1865), S. 37, applicability of, to suits for rent of the nature of kattubadi 590

MADRAS TOWN NUISANCES ACT (III of 1889), S. 3 (5)—Prosecution by Sanitary Inspector, legality of—Use of charge-sheet forms—Complaint—Police report—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (1) (h), 190 (1) (a), 200.

A Sanitary Inspector, not empowered to exercise the powers of a Police Officer, can initiate proceedings under the Madras Town Nuisances Act.

He cannot put in a charge-sheet or submit a Police report to the Magistrate, but the mere use by him of a printed form appropriate to offences under the District Municipalities Act for embodying the substance of his complaint will not render the prosecution illegal when the document was treated as a complaint under section 190 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code and the complainants examined under section 200. M PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. SHAMSUDIN SAHIB, 18 CR. L. J. 641 289

MAJORITY ACT (IX of 1875), S. 2 518

MALABAR COMPENSATION FOR TENANTS' IMPROVEMENTS ACT (MAD ACT I OF 1909), Ss. 4, 5, 10, 9—Trees of spontaneous growth—Compensation—Right of jenmi to value of trees cut by tenant—Agreement enabling jenmi to cut and remove trees, validity of.

There is nothing in the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act of 1909 which deals or was intended to deal with the transfer of ownership in trees of spontaneous growth from the jenmi to the tenant. The Act is confined to the question of compensation. The Act awards compensation to the tenant in respect of all spontaneously grown timber left on the holding on ejectment which came into existence either during the term of the tenant or that of his predecessor, provided that no compensation has already been paid for it.

MALABAR COMPENSATION FOR TENANTS' IMPROVEMENTS ACT—concl'd.

A contract entered into after 1886, which allows the landlord to come on the land and cut and remove spontaneously grown trees, is void as it contravenes the provisions of the Act.

During the continuance of the tenancy the tenant is entitled to cut down trees in the ordinary course of prudent forestry, though they may belong to the landlord.

Quære:—Whether trees of spontaneous growth in Malabar before Madras Act I of 1900 was passed belong to the jenmi or the tenant? M NARAYANI AMMA v. KUNCHUKUTTI AMMA, 21 M. L. T. 271; (1917) M. W. N. 309; 32 M. L. J. 541 247

MALABAR LAW—Adima or anubhavam tenure, nature of—Inalienability.

Inalienability is a characteristic of adima or anubhavam tenure. M VENKATAGIRI PATTAR v. MANAVIKRAMA, (1917) M. W. N. 419; 6 L. W. 114 769

Decree, personal, against karnavan—Execution, application for, against tarwad—Burden of proof.

Where a decree is against the karnavan of a tarwad personally and execution is prayed for against the tarwad, it is for the decree-holder to show that, as a matter of fact, the decree was obtained against the tarwad for money borrowed for tarwad necessity. M KUTTAN v. KALLIANI AMMA, 6 L. W. 25 449

MALICIOUS SEARCH, damages for, suit for—Complaint to Magistrate—Search by Police—Complainant, liability of

Where a certain result is the inevitable consequence of a certain action, the party guilty of the action is responsible for the result. A complaint of theft to responsible authority must inevitably result in the search of the house of the person accused of the offence. A search caused by a malicious complaint is, therefore, a malicious search. The party responsible for a malicious complaint is responsible for damages resulting from the malicious search. PAT JAI PANDE v. JALDHARI RAUT 079

MAXIM—Actio personalis moritur cum persona 1008MINOR, decree against—Suit to set aside decree—Prejudice to minor—Proof 227

MIRASI RIGHTS, nature of—Gramanattam, rights in—Poramboke lands, rights of mirasidars in—Grant of house-site by Government in mirasi village—Ejectment of tenants in occupation of house-site, suit for, by mirasidar.

Per Wallis, C. J.—In the absence of evidence of user there is no general presumption of the mirasidars' ownership of the nattam, but where user is shown the presumption of ownership readily arises.

The preferential right of the mirasidars to cultivable waste is not of itself a sufficient foundation for the general proposition that they are entitled to eject inhabitants of the village from portions of the unoccupied nattam granted to them by Government, though they may be entitled, as incidental to such right of preferential cultivation, to the allotment of sites on the unoccupied nattam, when necessary.

MIRASI RIGHTS—concl'd.

Before the advent of British rule and especially under the Muhammadan Government, unoccupied nattam was not generally recognised by Government as the private property of the mirasidars, nor has the latter's ownership been established subsequently either by Government recognition or by judicial decisions.

Per Ayling, J.—Where in a mirasi village a person has been granted a portion of the nattam poramboke for use as house-site by a duly authorised Government officer, the mirasidar cannot by virtue of any right, privilege or title inherent in him as mirasidar disregard the grant of the house-site by such officer, and evict the grantee from possession.

This rule does not apply to cases in which a mirasidar has, prior to the grant by Government, already acquired a title to the particular site either by previous grant or prescription, and sues on such title.

The mirasidars of a particular village are not precluded from showing, if they can, that in that village they have acquired by prescription a title in the nattam generally as against Government, which would include the right claimed. But the mere fact that they are the mirasidars of the village neither carries with it such a right, nor does it even raise a presumption of the existence of such a right.

The incidents attaching to mirasi tenure may have a common origin in the status of the mirasidar, but none of them necessarily involves another, and they vary with the description of land to which they relate. Each requires to be separately established, and recognition by the State, whether express or implied, is an indispensable condition for the enforcement of each.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—In a mirasi village the rights of Government over waste (including nattam and cheri) are subject to the rights of the mirasidars.

The nature and extent of such rights are not uniform throughout the Presidency but vary, and the onus is on the mirasidars to prove that any specified incidents attach to mirasi rights in any particular district, there being no presumption that gramanattam is the exclusive property of the mirasidars.

The rights of mirasidars over waste are not extinguished by the mere fact that the Government grants pattas to strangers.

Per Sankaran Nair, J. (in Order of Reference).—A mirasidar, so far as the Government is concerned, is the proprietor of the waste lands in the village. But he has not the right to convert immemorial waste, i. e., anadi karambu into cultivable land, without the consent of Government or of the non-mirasidars of the village. Whatever may be the rights of the mirasidars, the Government is not entitled to deal with immemorial waste or introduce other pattadars. M SESHACHALA CHETTY v. PARA CHINNASAMI, 32 M. L. J. SUP. 1; 40 M. 410 509

MORTGAGE—Agreement to keep mortgaged premises insured, failure to perform—Insurance effected by Receiver in mortgage suit—Money received under insurance policy, applicability of 623

— of agricultural land—Redemption to be had in khali fasl jeth—Time, whether essence of contract 381

—, anomalous—Redemption, clog on.

One of the elementary rules of equity is that once a mortgage always a mortgage, and that a mortgagee should not be allowed to obtain any undue advantage by his mortgage except the amount of the principal, interest and costs due on his mortgage.

Where under an usufructuary mortgage the mortgagee was put into possession to receive the usufruct of property in lieu of interest, and there was a condition in the mortgage that if the mortgagor should fail to pay the rent of the mortgaged holding to the landlord, the transaction will become an absolute sale in favour of the mortgagee:

Held, that the condition of forfeiture or the transaction becoming an absolute sale in the event of the mortgagor failing to pay the rent was void, being a clog on the equity of redemption C BADAL MOLLA v. CHEMAI MONDAL 894

— Charge, creation of—Intention—Annuity granted under ekrarnama, whether charge.

The question whether a charge was or was not created upon a certain property is one of intention. In equity no charge can be created unless there is an intent to charge.

Where the operative part of an ekrarnama, executed by a person in whose favour a lady released her claim to a certain share of a property, stated that the lady was to get an annuity from the said share and was entitled to recover it by suit from the share:

Held, that the annuity was made a charge upon the share, even though there was no specification of the property in the schedule attached to the ekrarnama, as the property was easily ascertainable without such schedule. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD. 865

— Clause restraining alienation by mortgagor, operation of.

The clause restraining alienation of the mortgaged property, which is generally inserted in mortgage bonds in this country, does not prevent alienation subject to the rights of the mortgagee. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD. 865

— by way of conditional sale—Proprietary rights of mortgagee, when called into existence.

The proprietary title of a mortgagee is called into existence only when the right of redemption is extinguished. P JAGAT RAM v. DHARAM SINGH 446

— Construction of deed—Mortgagor left in possession of part of mortgaged property, position of—Occupancy rights, acquisition of 500

— Decree against father—Execution—Sale—

MORTGAGE—contd.

Redemption, suit for, by son not in existence at date of decree, maintainability of—Right of son not made party to suit 525

— Document, construction of—Usufructuary hypothecation bond—Hypothecation clause, claim on, barred—Redemption, suit for—Rights of mortgagor and mortgagee—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 3, 28.

A mortgage-bond, entitled usufructuary hypothecation bond, for Rs. 3,000 provided that interest on the moiety of the amount advanced would be payable out of the usufruct and that interest at one per cent. per month would be paid on the balance by the mortgagor. The final provision was that both sums were to be paid in a lump on the same day 10 years afterwards. After the right to sue on the hypothecation clause became barred, the mortgagor sued to redeem the mortgage and claimed that he was entitled to possession of the entire property on payment of Rs. 1,500 only:

Held, (1) that the document constituted only one mortgage transaction;

(2) that section 23 of the Limitation Act could not apply to the case and that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem without discharging the whole debt.

The limitation of the mortgagee's right to recover must not be read as a good plea to be urged by a mortgagor endeavouring to redeem, and unless the mortgagee is compelled to bring a suit within the meaning of section 3 of the Limitation Act, he is entitled to set up every claim in defence that he has in law to support the debt which still remains due. M NATHAMUNI PILLAI v. VENGAMMAL, 5 L. W. 593 358

— execution of—Executant, illiterate—Execution, proof of 191

— Forfeiture, clause for, in default of redemption within given time—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1922), s. 60—Clog on equity of redemption.

The rule of English Equity Courts which forbids any clogging of the right of redemption is not applicable in India and a clause for forfeiture in a mortgage should be given effect to in the absence of any specific law or of any established practice to the contrary. L B MAUNG MA LA v. MAUNG CHOT 863

— for legal necessity—Interest, onerous—Mortgagee, position of—Court, duty of—Decree on mortgage obtained against father alone—Sons, position of 369

— Mortgagee in possession—Interest, liability to pay 779

— Mortgagor, stipulation by, to pay by instalments—Default—Interest, whether penalty 770

— Option of suit on failure to pay interest or on expiration of term fixed for payment, effect of—Waiver, effect of—Limitation, commencement of.

A covenant empowering the mortgagee to sue for payment on the happening of a certain event or to wait till the period originally fixed for payment has expired, gives him an option which cannot be taken away by Statute unless there is anything to show that the grant of such an option is illegal or forbidden by law.

MORTGAGE—contd.

The option is for the benefit of the mortgagee and if he waives it, limitation cannot start running against him in spite of that waiver.

A mortgage bond provided for payment of principal money with interest in two years and contained a stipulation that if the interest was not regularly paid every month, the mortgagee shall be at liberty (ikhtiar hoga) either to sue for the unpaid interest or for the entire money due on the mortgage and further provided that on the expiry of the period fixed for re-payment (ba surat inqizai wada) the mortgagee shall be at liberty to recover the entire money due to him by the sale of the mortgaged property:

Held, that there being alternative contracts provided for in the mortgage bond, it was open to the mortgagee to forego the one and sue to enforce the other. O RAM PARSHAD v. QADRO, 20 O. C. 132; 4 O. L. J. 341 232

— Redemption—Construction of document—Possession, loss of, authorising mortgagee to claim principal with interest—Revenue to be paid by mortgagee—Profits, enjoyment of, in lieu of interest—Conduct of mortgagee—Mortgagee, position of—Ouster, period of, interest for—Excess revenue, claim for.

Under the terms of an usufructuary mortgage-deed, the mortgagee was to pay the revenue (the amount of which was mentioned in the deed) assessed on the mortgaged property and to retain the balance of the profits in lieu of interest on the mortgage-money, and was further entitled to claim his money with interest thereon at a certain specified rate immediately on a loss of possession over the property or on the accrual of any other injury. The mortgagee remained in possession for five years from the date of the mortgage, and lost possession for two years after this, but owing to no fault of the parties to the mortgage. He waited till possession was restored to him, but this time the revenue of the property was considerably enhanced. Nevertheless, he remained in possession for seventeen years, paying the enhanced revenue and enjoying the net profits of the property. Then on a redemption suit having been brought, he claimed, in addition to his mortgage-money, interest on it at the stipulated rate for the period of his dispossession, and the excess revenue that he had had to pay since the restoration of possession, together with interest thereon:

Held, that, in view of the terms of the mortgage-deed and the conduct of the mortgagee, he was entitled to interest on his mortgage-money for the period of his ouster, but only at a reasonable and not at the stipulated rate; and that he was not entitled to the excess revenue paid by him, nor to any interest on the same. O MAHABIR SINGH v. MATA BADAL, 4 O. L. J. 348 402

— Redemption—Integrity broken—Mortgagor, suit by one—Extent of share, redemption of.

Where the integrity of a mortgage has been broken, one of the mortgagors is entitled only to redeem the share which he owns in the mortgaged property. A ZA BUNNESSA BIBI v. PARBHU NARAIN SINGH, 15 A. L. J. 625 345

— Redemption—Mortgagee in possession, whether estopped from denying right of purchaser of mortgaged property to redeem 648

MORTGAGE—contd.

— Redemption suit—Compromise, non-registration of, effect of—Registration Act (VIII of 1871), s. 49—Mortgagee, possession of, under compromise—Adverse possession.

By an unregistered deed of compromise a mortgagor and mortgagee consented to the complete transfer of the equity of redemption to the latter. The mortgagee took possession of the property in pursuance of the compromise and both parties acted upon it for nearly forty years:

Held, that the possession of the mortgagee since the compromise was adverse to the mortgagor and his heirs. A KHEDU RAI v. SHEOPARSAN RAI, 15 A. L. J. 346; 39 A. 423 121

— of shares—Company—Liquidation—Payment of calls by mortgagee—Mortgagee, whether can recover amount from mortgagor.

Plaintiff advanced a sum of money to the defendant on the security of certain shares in the S. Bank in February 1913. In October 1913 defendant wished to overdraw his account with the plaintiff Bank, and this was allowed on a deposit of some more shares in terms of a formal overdraft agreement. All the shares deposited were transferred to the plaintiff Bank's name on the share register of the S. Bank, and dividends when received were credited by the plaintiff Bank to the loan account of the defendant. In September 1913, the S. Bank shares began to fall, and the plaintiff Bank sold some of the mortgaged shares before a winding up order was made for the compulsory liquidation of the S. Bank. In the liquidation the plaintiff Bank was placed on the A list of contributories for the shares held by them, and on the B list for the shares sold by them, and were forced to pay calls:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff Bank could recover the amount of principal and interest advanced by it to the defendant, but that it was not entitled to the amount paid by it as calls or to any declaration of indemnity as to its liability in respect of the shares sold by it;

(2) that the plaintiff did not occupy the position of trustee for the mortgagors at the time of paying the calls and was, therefore, not entitled to an indemnity as trustee.

It is not an implied condition of a contract of mortgage that the mortgagor should indemnify the mortgagee against the consequences of holding property which he holds for his own security and not for the benefit of the mortgagor.

A forced payment of a call by the registered holder of shares upon a compulsory liquidation cannot be regarded as an expenditure for the preservation of the security. B BIRDICHAND JIVRAJ v. STANDARD BANK, LTD., 19 Bom. L. R. 341. 167 — Suit by mortgagee to recover mortgage-debt—Mortgagee unable to restore possession of mortgaged property—Procedure.

There is no authority for the broad proposition that if the mortgagee cannot for any reason put the mortgagor in possession of the whole of the mortgaged property, he cannot recover the mortgage-debt. M KOTTAYAT GOPALA MENON v. KOLAT NARAYANA KURUP, 5 L. W. 339; (1917) M. W. N. 289 70

MORTGAGE—contd.

— — — Title of mortgagor decreed against in suit wherein mortgagee not impleaded—Appeal, right of, by mortgagee who purchased in Court auction.

Where the title of a mortgagor to the mortgaged property is negatived by a decree in a suit to which the mortgagee is not a party and the mortgagee, who purchases the property in execution of a decree for enforcement of the security, is resisted in taking possession and driven to instituting a fresh suit to establish his mortgage, he can be permitted to appeal against the decree as representing the mortgagor or his representatives against whom the decree was passed. M SUBBA PILLAI v. RANGASAMI, (1917) M. W. N. 306 846

— — — , usufructuary, construction of—Malguzari, meaning of—Mortgagee, enhanced land revenue paid by, position of—Redemption.

The fact that a bargain becomes unconscionable if a particular meaning is attached to the words used in the instrument evidencing that bargain, affords no reason for holding that the intention of the parties to the bargain was otherwise if the terms are clear. But where a word used is capable of more than one interpretation, a Court is justified in adopting the interpretation which is consistent with the existence of a contract such as persons of ordinary intelligence would make and rejecting the interpretation which involves the acceptance of a contract such as no sensible person would be likely to agree to.

By an usufructuary mortgage the mortgagee was to retain profits arising out of the mortgaged property after paying the land revenue assessed on it, in lieu of interest on the principal money. The mortgage was to be redeemed on receipt of the principal money only:

Held, that the mortgagee was entitled, on redemption, to claim the difference between the original land revenue and the subsequently enhanced land revenue, but was not entitled to it if the amount of the profits was not shown to have been reduced owing to the enhancement of the land revenue. O CHARU CHANDRA BISWAS v. LALLAN SINGH, 4 O. L. J. 148 42

— — — , usufructuary—Redemption—Hypothecation by way of simple mortgage—Limitation.

An usufructuary mortgage was executed in February 1891 and in September of the same year a further advance was made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor on the security of the same property, which was hypothecated by way of simple mortgage with a further covenant that the simple mortgage should be paid off before the redemption of the usufructuary one. The plaintiff claimed to redeem the usufructuary mortgage without paying any sum due under the simple mortgage of September 1891:

Held, that as a suit on the mortgage-deed of September 1891 would be barred, the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the usufructuary mortgage without paying off the simple mortgage. A ACHHAIBAR SINGH v. RADHI 404

— — — Zar-i-peshgi lease—Ejectment by lessor—Mortgagee, right of, to recover damages for dispossession—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit for damages for breach of contract—Appeal, second, whether lies.

MORTGAGE—concl'd.

Under the terms of a contract embodied in a registered instrument the plaintiff was entitled to remain in possession of certain land for five years. After the expiry of that period the proprietors of the land obtained a decree for the ejectment of the plaintiff from the Revenue Courts. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for a sum of Rs. 125 with interest on the allegation that he could not be legally ejected from his possession over the land without the payment of that sum:

Held, (1) that if the plaintiff's suit could be treated as a suit for damages for breach of contract, the second appeal to the High Court was barred by section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court;

(2) that if the contract upon which the plaintiff based his suit was a mortgage, then inasmuch as he was not in possession at the date of the suit he was not entitled to recover the sum paid by him. A BHAIRO PRASAD v. KURA MAL, 15 A. L. J. 534 578

— — — Zar-i-peshgi—Mortgagee, liability of, to pay certain annual instalments to mortgagor—Instalments, whether constitute rent under Bengal Tenancy Act—Suit to recover arrears of instalments—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 116—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, applicability of.

An advance of Rs. 12,000 was made under a registered deed to a zemindar. In lieu of the advance he put the creditor in possession of his share in a zemindari in zarpeshgi thicca. The thiccadar was to deduct Rs. 620 out of the income of the property on account of interest and to pay Rs. 23-4-0 annually to the owner:

Held, (1) that the deed amounted to a usufructuary mortgage and that the person in possession was a mortgagee;

(2) that the annual payments to be made by the thiccadar were not of the nature of rent within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act;

(3) that a suit for the recovery of arrears of these instalments was governed not by Article 3 of Schedule III, Part I of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but by Article 116, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. PAT BARNANDEO NARAIN SINGH v. RAMANAND PRASAD SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 795 594

— — — SUIT—Paramount title, whether can be gone into.

In a suit upon a mortgage no question of title paramount to the mortgaged property should be gone into. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD. 865

MUHAMMADAN LAW—Funeral ceremonies of deceased Muhammadan—Reasonable expenses.

Funeral ceremonies of a Muhammadan should be performed in a manner suitable to the deceased's position in life and means.

In determining what is a reasonable amount in a particular case, the Court must take into consideration the social practices of the class to which the deceased belonged. P MUHAMMAD HAMID ULLAH KHAN v. MUHAMMAD MAJID ULLAH KHAN 374 ——— CUSTOM, whether can be proved in derogation of Muhammadan Law.

MUHAMMADAN LAW—contd.

Evidence is admissible to prove a custom although it is at variance with Muhammadan Law. A ALI ASGHAR v. COLLECTOR OF BULANDSHAHR, 15 A. L. J. 597 753

——— DOWER—Discord between husband and wife—Dissolution of marriage at instance of wife—Court, whether can decrease or increase contracted amount—Divorce, effect of.

Per Sharfuddin, J.—A Court of Law has no power to decrease or increase the contracted amount of dower.

Where there has been a divorce it is immaterial whether the dower was prompt or deferred, as after the cessation of the relationship of husband and wife either by death or divorce, the dower, if not already paid, becomes due.

Per Roe, J.—Under the Muhammadan Law when discords originate between married parties or when the wife herself is anxious to obtain a divorce without any justifiable cause, she has simply to abandon her claim to the settlement in order to secure a dissolution of her marriage. PAT BIBI SOGRA v. MOHAMMAD SAYEED 672 ——— GIFT, essentials of—Possession of property in occupation of tenant, delivery of, mode of.

The three essentials of gift under the Muhammadan Law are: offer by the donor, acceptance by or on behalf of the donee, and seisin.

As regards the delivery of possession what the law contemplates is that the possession required to be given must be such as the nature of the property permits. If the donor has done all that he could do to perfect the contemplated gift, which is attended with complete publicity, the mere fact that the donee was not present or that possession was obtained by him sometime after does not invalidate the transfer.

The possession of the property in the occupation of a tenant can be delivered by allowing the donee to collect rents and profits or by requesting the tenant to attorn to the donee.

Where a deed of gift in respect of a vacant plot of land contained a recital as to delivery of possession and was subsequently registered:

Held, that under the circumstances, the donor could not be expected to do anything more to perfect the title and that the gift was, therefore, valid and binding. P MUHAMMAD HAMID ULLAH KHAN v. MUHAMMAD MAJID ULLAH KHAN 374 ——— INHERITANCE—Co-heirs, nature of, estate of—Alienation by one co-heir in possession of estate, whether binding on others.

If one of the co-heirs of a deceased Muhammadan, in possession of the whole estate of the deceased or of any part of it, sells property in his possession forming part of the estate for discharging the debts of the deceased, such sale is not binding on the other co-heirs or creditors of the deceased.

MUHAMMADAN LAW—contd.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The theory of Muhammadan jurisprudence, on which the right of succession and inheritance is based, is that even after death, the deceased's rights in his properties still inhere in him, to the extent necessary for meeting the funeral charges and the legal obligations and liabilities incurred in his lifetime and also for carrying out his wishes, as expressed in his last Will and testament, within the limits laid down by the law.

On the death of a Muhammadan, the inheritance vests in his heirs according to their respective shares, although in the administration of the estate the funeral expenses, debts and legacies must be paid first and it is only the residue that is available for distribution among the heirs. It is not correct to say that the devolution of the estate on the heirs does not take place or is postponed until the funeral expenses and the debts and legacies have been paid.

The co-heirs of a deceased Muhammadan take their shares in severalty, their rights being analogous to those of tenants-in-common, and not of members of a joint Hindu family.

According to the principles of Muhammadan Law one co-heir of a deceased Muhammadan has no right to deal with the shares of the other heirs. M ABDUL MAJEETH KHAN v. KRISHNAMACHARIAR, 32 M. L. J. 195; (1917 M. W. N. 346; 40 M. 243; 5 L. W. 767 210 ——— INHERITANCE—Offerings made at mausoleum of deceased Muhammadan, title to.

The offerings made at the mausoleum not to the sect of the deceased but to his memory belong to his heirs and not to his followers. O SHARFUDDIN v. MAQBULUNNISSA, 4 O. L. J. 174 101 ——— Property held by owner of shrine, nature of.

One I, who made a living by piri muridi and owned in a graveyard the tomb of an ancestor of his, executed a Will whereby he left the whole of his property to his wife with a reversion after her death to her brother K. He also appointed K manager of the estate on behalf of his wife after his death and also his own successor and representative for the continuation of the urs and for carrying out the duties and receiving the offerings connected with the piri muridi. On his death his daughter by an earlier wife sued for possession of her share of the property:

Held, that there was nothing to show that the testator appointed K sajjada nashin in the usual acceptance of the term or that the property in dispute was ever dedicated to the upkeep of the shrine, but that it was held by the testator in proprietary right and not as a keeper of the shrine and that the plaintiff was entitled to her share under the Muhammadan law. P ZINAT BIBI v. EMNA 111 P. L. R. 1917: 92 P. W. R. 1917 240 ——— MARRIAGE—Divorce—Tafviz—Delegation of power of divorce to wife, validity of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 26, applicability of.

It is lawful for a Muhammadan husband to delegate to his wife power to divorce herself on certain conditions, e. g., on the husband marrying a second wife.

MUHAMMADAN LAW—concl'd.

A provision in a dower-deed whereby a Muhammadan husband authorises his wife to divorce herself from him in the event of his marrying a second wife is not void under section 26 of the Contract Act.

Quare.—Whether there would be any difference in the law according as the dower-deed was an anti-nuptial or post-nuptial contract. C BADU MIA v. BADRANNESSA 803 —MARRIAGE—Puberty, effect of.

The Court cannot interfere in a case where a minor girl completes her fifteenth year of age and thus becomes competent under the Muhammadan Law to contract a valid marriage with a husband of her own choice. A MOHAMMAD FASAHAT ULLAH v. TAHIRA BIBI 136 —TRUST or gift, deed of, operation of—Possession, delivery of, necessity of.

In order to make a deed of trust or gift operative under the Muhammadan Law, it is necessary that possession should forthwith be delivered to the donee or trustee.

Where a deed of trust is divisible, and possession has been taken of some of the property comprised in the deed, the deed is operative only to the extent to which possession has been taken. PAT OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL v. NIM CHAND MARWARI 856

—WAKF—Dedication, actual, necessity of.

Under the Muhammadan Law no formality is required to be gone through for the purpose of creating a valid wakf, it is enough if the donor declares that he constitutes a property wakf or has constituted it wakf. There must, however, be not only a mere intention to dedicate property but an actual dedication. P MUHAMMAD HAMID ULLAH KHAN v. MUHAMMAD MAJID ULLAH KHAN 374 NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT (XXVI OF 1881), S. 28, scope of—Payee, description of, by vilasam of firm—Mercantile usage—Nattukottai Chetties, custom among—Document, construction of.

The principle underlying section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act that if a promissory note is made payable by a person as agent of another, the latter is not liable personally on the note, applies also to the case of a payee.

It is a well-known usage among Nattukottai Chetties to draw hundies, bills and promissory notes in the name of the agent of a firm represented by the firm's vilasam, and in such cases it is the firm indicated by the vilasam which is intended to be the payee and not the agent whose name appears on the instrument.

The question is entirely one of construction of a document. M GHULAMSA RAYUTHAR v. VISVANATHAN CHETTIAR, (1917) M. W. N. 344; 5 L. W. 721 347

—S. 80—Hand-note 'payable on demand,' whether carries interest—'On demand,' meaning of—Demand, whether necessary before institution of suit—'After demand,' meaning of.

Where a hand-note is silent as to the rate of interest payable, the lender is entitled, under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date when the money ought to have been paid.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT—concl'd.

The words 'payable on demand' have a legal meaning and sense, which convey that the note is payable on the date of its execution. In such a case no demand is necessary prior to the suit.

If, however, the words used are 'after demand', then a demand becomes necessary before a suit is instituted. PAT BISHUN CHAND v. AUDH BIHARI LAL, 1 P. L. W. 615; 2 P. L. J. 451; (1917) PAT. 279 350

OBJECTION OF LAW not pressed by party, whether can be given effect to—Pleadings.

An objection of positive law apparent on the face of the proceedings should be given effect to, even if it has not been pressed by the party in whose favour it would work. C GOBIND CHANDRA PAL v. KAILASH CHANDRA PAL, 25 C. L. J. 354 230

OUDH ESTATES ACT (I OF 1869), Ss. 3, 8 555

—Ss. 8, 10, 14, 15, 22—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, applicability of—"Successor," meaning of—Lineal primogeniture, rule as to succession by—Hindu Law—Will, interpretation of—Will executed by talukdar in favour of person who would not have succeeded under the Act, effect of—Absolute estate conferred by Will—Devise, lapse of, by death—Ulterior disposition becoming operative on death of first devisee during lifetime of testator—Transfers made by persons having no title, effect of.

One G. was the owner of a taluka to whom a primogeniture sanad was granted. He was succeeded by his son who died leaving two sons, D. B. and S. B. On the death of D. B., S. B. succeeded to the taluka and in 1895 executed a Will, to the effect that after his death his wife was to succeed to the entire taluka as full proprietor and that upon her death the taluka was to go to his mother D. K. as absolute owner and on her death intestate to his daughter S. K. and her heirs. Adoption was also permitted to the widow and failing her to the mother. The wife of S. B., the last talukdar, died during the lifetime of her husband. On the death of S. B. in 1899 his mother D. K. succeeded to the taluka under the terms of the Will of 1895. She made certain mortgages affecting the villages included in the taluka during her lifetime and died in 1906. After her death S. B.'s daughter S. K. came into possession of the taluka, alleging that her mother D. K. had executed a Will in her favour in 1902, and she also executed certain transfers regarding portions of the taluka property. In 1911 two collaterals of the husband of D. K., viz., S. B. S. and K. S. instituted two suits for recovery of the entire taluka against the daughter S. K., alleging that she took nothing under the Will of 1895 and was not, therefore, entitled to the estates. S. B. S. claimed the whole estate on the ground that he was the nearest male heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. K. S. claimed to be the nearest male relative and ignored the rule of lineal primogeniture. The daughter S. K. died during the pendency of the suit and the question was as to what interest D. K. took under the Will and which of the plaintiffs was entitled to succeed. K. S. died during the trial of the case and S. S. and D. S. were brought on the record as his legal representatives. Subsequently D. S. relinquished his rights in favour of S. S., who thereafter remained as the sole plaintiff in the suit brought by K. S.:

ODDH ESTATES ACT—contd

Held, (1) that the wife of S. B. took nothing as she died in her husband's lifetime, the devise in her favour having lapsed on her death;

(2) that on the death of the wife of S. B. the ulterior disposition in favour of D. K., his mother, became operative and she took an absolute interest in the taluka under the terms of the Will of 1895;

(3) that the Will of 1902 alleged to have been executed by D. K. in favour of the daughter S. K. was not established;

(4) that under section 15 of Act I of 1869 the effect of the Will of 1895 in favour of D. K., who would not have succeeded to the estate except for that Will, was to take the taluka for the purpose of succession out of the Act and the successors of the husband of D. K. were to be found out by the ordinary provisions of the Hindu Law;

(5) that the rule of succession laid down in the sanad granted to G. was not applicable to the case, because D. K. being a legatee under the Will of 1895 could not be considered as a "successor" under the terms of the sanad;

(6) that the provisions of the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895) did not apply to the case;

(7) that the rule of succession by lineal primogeniture as laid down in the sanad being inapplicable, both the plaintiffs, being equal in degree in their relationship to the husband of D. K., were entitled each to half of the taluka;

(8) that the transfers made by D. K. were binding on the reversioners, whereas those made by S. K. were inoperative and of no effect. C SITAL SINGH v. SITLA BAKHSI SINGH, 4 O L. J. 193 469

— Ss. 22, 23, 3, 8—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, effect of grant of, in cases of estates entered in lists IV and VI—Sanad, supersession of, under Oudh Estates Act—Ordinary law, whether includes sanad under s. 23—Revival under Crown Grants Act of sanad already superseded—Custom—Primogeniture—Proof—Exclusion of females—Single heir succession.

One A. was the owner of Taluka Kundrajit before the annexation of the Province of Oudh. He had four sons, whose heirs subsequently under the British Rule divided the entire taluka among themselves giving four distinct names to the four portions so divided. One of the portions was the portion in dispute and was called Taluka Tajpur. It was allotted to C., the eldest male in the line of the second son of A. The sanad granted by the British Government was a primogeniture sanad, with respect to the whole Taluka Kundrajit issued jointly in the names of the four descendants of A., but their names were entered in lists I and IV prepared under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act. C. died in 1899 and on his death the taluka came into the possession of his only son K. On the death of K. his widow H., the defendant, succeeded to the possession of the estate. The plaintiff alleged the taluka to be impartible and as the only son of one of the brothers of C., claimed the estate from the widow on the ground that he was the nearest male heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture laid down in the sanad which governed the succession to the estate, as being part of the personal law under section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act and also according to an ancient custom of lineal primogeniture prevailing in the family to the same effect. He also impleaded in the suit the descendants of B., a brother of C., who according to the plaintiff were interested in denying his title to the property in dispute. The defendants denied that the estate was an impartible taluka, also denied the alleged family custom and contended that the estate having been entered in list IV, the succession to it was governed by section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act which prescribed the ordinary personal law as the rule of succession applicable to the case, and that the rule of succession laid down in the sanad was not applicable nor was the sanad, as contended for by the plaintiff, part of the personal law under section 23 of the Act. The descendants of B. also alleged that on the death of the widow the nearest reversioners of K., the husband of the widow, at that time would be entitled to the estate. The questions for determination in the case were whether the sanad still governed the succession to the estate both as part of the personal law and also in view of the Crown Grants Act XV of 1895, or whether it was superseded by Act I of 1869 and whether the family custom relied upon by the plaintiff had been established. It was agreed that if the rule of succession by male lineal primogeniture was established as applicable to the estate, the defendant being a female would necessarily be excluded from succession:

ODDH ESTATES ACT—concl.

Held, per Kendall, A. J. C., (1) that under section 23 of Act I of 1869, succession to the estate was governed by the ordinary law and not by the sanad; the sanad being part of the ordinary law only in cases of estates entered in lists III and V and not in the case of estates entered in lists II, IV and VI;

(2) that the operation of the sanad was superseded by Act I of 1869 and that the Crown Grants Act, XV of 1895, did not affect the provisions of Act I of 1869 and consequently had not the effect of reviving the sanad already declared inoperative under Act I of 1869;

(3) that on the evidence on the record the plaintiff had failed to establish the family custom of male lineal primogeniture by which females would be necessarily excluded.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.—(1) The sanad was not wholly superseded by Act I of 1869 and the sanad like custom must be considered as part of the personal law referred to in section 22, clause 2, and section 23 of the Act;

(2) the only family custom proved in the case was the custom of a single heir descent, which did not exclude the females from succession. O BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR, 4 O L. J. 233 555

ODDH RENT ACT—contd.

ODDH RENT ACT (XXII OF 1886), Ss. 4 (1), 47 (1)—Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Tenant, re-admission of, to portion of previous holding—Enhancement of rent, legality of 130

— S. 33—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 79—Enhancement of rent—Tenant with heritable non-transferable rights—Settlement Court, order by—Judicial decision—Occupancy tenant.

The decision by the Settlement Court holding a tenant to have heritable and non-transferable rights is a judicial decision as contemplated by section 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act; and the rent of a tenant holding under such a decision cannot be enhanced under section 33 of the Oudh Rent Act, although he be recorded as an occupancy tenant in the village papers. U P B R SUKHPAL SINGH v. BRIJ KISHORE, 4 O. L. J. 166 63

— Ss. 47 (1), 4 (1)—Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Tenant, re-admission of, to portion of previous holding—Enhancement of rent, legality of

Where a tenant after his ejectment from the holding is re-admitted to only a portion of the same at an enhanced rent, the enhancement is illegal if it exceeds by more than one anna in the rupee or $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. the rent payable by him before his ejectment. O FATEH BAHADUR KHAN v. JAGRAJ KUNWAR, 20 O. C. 190 130

— S. 61—'Landlord,' meaning of—Co-sharer collecting rent separately from tenant, power of—Ejectment.

The word 'landlord' in section 61 of the Oudh Rent Act means the person or persons to whom a tenant is liable to pay the whole of his rent. A petty co-sharer who collects rent separately from a tenant is not, therefore, by reason of an unsatisfied decree for rent entitled alone to eject the tenant. U P B R MAFIZ ALI v. MUMTAZ HUSAIN, 4 O. L. J. 190 114

— S. 107 G, H—Rent-free grant, sale of—Purchaser, position of.

The purchaser of a rent-free grant cannot, under any circumstances, acquire a title superior to that of his vendor. U P B R LIHAZUNNISSA KHANAM v. DADHICH SINGH, 4 O. L. J. 162 60 — Ss. 107 G, H, E, 108, CL. (5A)—Declaratory suit against order passed under Chapter VIIA, maintainability of—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

The propriety of an order of a Revenue Court granting or refusing under-proprietary rights under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act, according as the conditions laid down there are satisfied or not, cannot be challenged in a Civil Court. But a declaratory suit on the ground of a pre-existing under-proprietary right in the presence of an adverse order of the Revenue Court is maintainable in the Civil Courts. O SHANKAR SAHAI v. GAJADHAR PRASAD, 20 O. C. 7; 4 O. L. J. 409 200

— Ss. 108 (8) 126, 126—Joint estate—Each co-sharer realising rent from each tenant according to his share—Ejectment—Notice 248

ODDH RENT ACT—concl'd.

— Ss. 126, 108 (8)—Joint estate—Each co-sharer realising rent from each tenant according to his share—Ejectment—Notice.

The mere fact that each of the co-sharers in an estate, which is joint within the meaning of section 126 (1) of the Oudh Rent Act, collects from each tenant his quota of rent according to his share does not authorise any of the co-sharers alone to eject a tenant by notice, unless a custom is established to that effect. U P B R MUHAMMAD YAKUB KHAN v. DURGA PRASAD, 4 O. L. J. 384 848

— S. 154—Under-proprietor, decree against, for arrears of rent—Encumbrancer of under-proprietary property, position of—Suit on encumbrance, maintainability of.

The mere fact that the encumbrancer of an under-proprietary property did not, in view of section 154 of the Oudh Rent Act, satisfy the decree for arrears of rent obtained by the superior proprietor against the under-proprietor, does not debar him from bringing a suit on the basis of his encumbrance. O SAIFU KHAN v. COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD, 4 O. L. J. 305 456

— S. 155—'Stranger,' meaning of—Pre-emption.

The word "stranger" in section 155 of the Oudh Rent Act means a stranger with regard to the whole village, in other words, somebody outside the village not only somebody outside the patti or mahal in which the land is situate. O MEHDI HASAN KHAN v. BRIJ BHUSHAN MISRA, 4 O. L. J. 167 64

"PACKAGE," meaning of, as used in risk-note.

The word "package" in a risk-note means both that which is packed, and that in which it is packed, i. e., its covering or receptacle. C KALI DASS MULLICK v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO., 21 C. W. N. 815 625

PARDANASHIN LADY, deed executed by—Execution—Burden of proof.

In considering the question whether there was intelligent execution of a deed by a pardanashin lady, the circumstances under which the transaction took place should be borne in mind.

The mere translating the deed or communicating the substance thereof to the pardanashin lady is not sufficient.

To make it binding upon her it must be shown that the deed was interpreted and explained to her.

Where a deed of English mortgage written out in English was read out and explained to a pardanashin Hindu widow before she executed it in the presence of her own people, and the reversionary heirs witnessed the execution and were consenting parties to it:

Held, that the deed was binding upon the lady. C SYAM PEARY DASSYA v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO. LTD. 865

PARTITION ACT (IV OF 1893), S. 4, scope of—Interpretation.

A restricted scope is not to be attributed to section 4 of the Partition Act. The section applies even where the person who claims partition of a family dwelling-house has also obtained a transfer of a share of other family property. C GOPAL CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYA v. PROBHA CHANDRA BISWAS 577

PARTITION ACT—1893—contd.

PARTITION DECREE, construction of—Parties minors—Agreement for common enjoyment of some items for which partition decreed—Non-certifying of agreement to Court, effect of—Absence of Court's sanction, effect of—Suit for partition of reserved items, nature of, when enforcement of agreement barred.

The cause of action for partition is one and the same and once it has merged into a preliminary decree and into a final decree which effects partition by metes and bounds and awards possession of particular shares to the parties, the plaintiff cannot have a second suit for partition as if the tenancy-in-common gave rise every day (even after the final decree) to a new cause of action.

So long as a preliminary partition decree has not been completed by a final decree, the Court is bound, on the application of either party to proceed with the suit to pass a final decree and such an application is not an application in execution.

A suit for partition of reserved items should be treated as one for recovery of possession of the share from which the plaintiff has been ousted, by a partition by metes and bounds, and the Appellate Court should treat all necessary amendments as having been made.

If an agreement between the parties to reserve partition of certain properties of which partition has been decreed by Court cannot be recognized under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, or Order XXXII, rule 7, or its enforcement has become barred under section 43, Civil Procedure Code, the only remedy of the parties to obtain a partition of such properties by metes and bounds is to proceed in execution of that decree and not by separate suit, provided a final decree was not passed in the first partition suit. M SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB, (1917) M. W. N. 327 820

PARTNERSHIP DEBT—Co-partner, whether can sue in name of partnership—Right of other co-partners—Costs, indemnity for.

One partner cannot sue alone to recover a debt due to the partnership; but a partner may use the name of his firm and the names of his co-partners to enable him to recover a debt due to the partnership firm, and any individual member of the partnership who is unwilling to join in recovering the debt has only a right to claim as against the partner who desires to sue an indemnity for costs. PAT SHEOLAL SAHU v. SAGARMAL, 1 P. L. W. 650; (1917) PAT. 239 108

PENAL CODE (ACT XLV OF 1860), Ss. 99, 147—Rioting—Private defence of property—Recourse to public authorities—Offence 311

—Ss. 147, 149 314

—Ss. 147, 99—Rioting—Private defence of property—Recourse to public authorities—Offence

PENAL CODE—contd.

J. R. lawfully and legally obtained possession of certain land and sowed certain crops on it. One B. K. in bad faith and dishonestly with a party of men went upon the land and commenced to cut the crops for the purpose of removing them or at least damaging them. Information of this was sent to J. R. and he in company with a band of men went straight to the spot to protect his property. A fight resulted in which very slight injuries were caused:

Held, that J. R. and his party were not guilty of rioting inasmuch as they were acting in the defence of their property, they did not use any more violence than was absolutely necessary for the protection of the property, and they had no time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities. A JAGESHAR RAI v. EMPEROR, 15 A. L. J. 47; 18 CR. L. J. 653 311

—S. 174 733

—S. 193—Sanction to prosecute—False statement—Materials arising out of cross-examination, whether sufficient 727

—S. 206—Disposing of car in contravention of hire-purchase agreement—Offence—Merger of agreement in decree of Civil Court 728

—S. 216B—“Assisting in any way to evade apprehension”, meaning of—Harbouring offender.

The words “assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension” in section 216B, Indian Penal Code, are not to be read as ejusdem generis with the two methods specified in the preceding part of the section, viz., supplying with food, shelter, etc.

Where the accused in answer to an enquiry of an Inspector of Police replied that his brother, who was charged under section 411, Indian Penal Code, was in the house and promised to produce him, but on going inside the house he returned after a delay of 15 minutes with his brother's son and said that he had made a mistake, as the son was in the house and not his brother, and subsequently on search being made by the Police, the brother was found hiding in the house:

Held, that as by the methods he employed the accused did give time and opportunity to the offender to conceal himself or effect his escape, he was guilty under section 216B for giving material assistance to the offender in evading apprehension. C MUCHI MIAN v. EMPEROR, 26 C. L. J. 141; 21 C. W. N. 1062; 18 CR. L. J. 731 731

—S. 277—Public place—Public well—Spitting into well—Offence.

A place is a public place if people are allowed access to it, though there may be no legal right to it. So a well is a public well if people are allowed to use its water.

Accused voluntarily spitted into a well, the water of which was used for drinking purposes:

Held, that he was guilty of an offence under section 277 of the Penal Code, although the degree to which his act rendered the water less fit for drinking might be small. N. RAMKARANLAL v. EMPEROR, 13 N. L. R. 68; 18 CR. L. J. 650 298

PENAL CODE—contd.

—S. 302—Murder—Plea of guilty—Conviction—Offence.

It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death. B LAXMYA SHIDAPPA v. EMPEROR, 19 Bom. L. R. 356; 18 Cr. L. J. 699

—Ss. 305, 306, 309 699

—S. 323 352

—S. 323—Compounding of offence—Compromise, who can. 295

The person by whom an offence under section 323 of the Penal Code, may be compounded is the person to whom the hurt is caused, and not the person who causes the hurt. A LALA v. EMPEROR, 15 A. L. J. 467; 18 Cr. L. J. 729

—S. 323—Death of complainant—Right of prosecution, survival of. 729

A prosecution under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code is a personal action and the right to carry on a prosecution under that section does not survive to the legal representatives of a deceased complainant. P RAMA NAND v. EMPEROR, 26 P. R. 1917 Cr.; 18 Cr. L. J. 688; 31 P. W. R. 1917 Cr. 1008

—S. 331—Voluntarily causing grievous hurt to extort confession—Evidence.

Where the deceased, who was suspected of having taken part in a theft and was in Police custody, was beaten by the accused Police Officers and the beating resulted in his death:

Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under section 331 of the Penal Code. P EMPEROR v. MIRAN BAKSHI, 12 P. W. R. 1917 Cr.; 18 Cr. L. J. 710

—S. 333 314

—S. 353—Public servant carrying out order of Court made under repealed Act—Assault—Offence.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to order delivery of possession of certain property, the mere fact that it purports to do so under the authority of a repealed Act will not take away its jurisdiction, nor deprive the process-server of the protection which the law gives to a public servant acting under the orders of a Court of competent jurisdiction.

A process-server who was not wearing his official badge was, while carrying out the orders of a Court of competent jurisdiction, assaulted by the accused. He had announced that he was carrying out Government order:

Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under section 353 of the Penal Code. N LAVA v. EMPEROR, 13 N. L. R. 87; 18 Cr. L. J. 689

—S. 379—Theft—Bona fide claim of right 732

—Ss. 406, 409 291

—S. 406—Criminal breach of trust—Jurisdiction 293

—S. 406, 206—Disposing of car in contravention of hire-purchase agreement—Offence—Merger of agreement in decree.

The accused obtained a motor-car from the complainant on a hire-purchase agreement, stipulating that so long as the whole amount of the price was not paid, the car would remain the absolute property of the complainant and that the accused would not in any way dispose of it. The complainant brought a suit for the recovery of the price still remaining due under the agreement and got a decree for a certain sum with costs, but no lien on the car was declared by the Court. Soon after this decree the accused sold away the car:

PENAL CODE—concl'd.

Held, that the accused in disposing of the car in contravention of the original hire-purchase agreement did not commit an offence under section 406, Indian Penal Code, as the original contract was merged in the decree of the Civil Court.

Semble.—That the act of the accused might amount to an offence under section 206, Indian Penal Code, for which proceedings might be taken by the complainant against the accused on getting sanction from the Court which made the decree. C COHEN ALEC ARAN v. SASI BHUSAN DAS GUPTA, 18 Cr. L. J. 728

—S. 408—Criminal misappropriation—Retention of money entrusted to servant—Offence—Proof.

The retention of money by a servant or clerk for fifteen months after its receipt raises a very serious doubt of bona fides against him, but the mere retention is not conclusive proof of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust. A MATHURA PRASAD v. EMPEROR, 18 Cr. L. J. 655; 15 A. L. J. 517

—S. 424—Mischief 335

—S. 426—Mischief—Cutting of ripe crop in full time—Offence.

Where accused acting in good faith and under a bona fide belief that he was entitled to the possession of certain land delivered to him by the Court in consequence of his purchase at an auction sale, cut away a ripe crop growing on the land in its full time:

Held, that he was not guilty of the offence of mischief under section 426 of the Penal Code. P TALEBUR v. EMPEROR, 2 P. L. W. 49; 18 Cr. L. J. 750

—S. 457—Burglary—Accused found along with others in possession of stolen property—Benefit of doubt.

The accused was charged with an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code. The evidence showed that two burglaries were committed in village B, that tracks of four men were followed from a place near the village, but later on they changed into the tracks of a mare and two men. A short distance further on the mare's tracks went off in one direction and the men's tracks were followed to village D, when the accused was arrested along with certain others in possession of certain bundles which were found to contain the stolen property:

He'd, that the mere fact that the accused was with the party in village D. did not prove that he was one of the burglars and that the case against him being doubtful he was entitled to an acquittal. P MEWA SINGH v. EMPEROR, 18 Cr. L. J. 657; 27 P. W. R. 1917 Cr. 305

PLEA NOT SPECIFICALLY RAISED—Court, power of.

A Court is justified in trying out a question arising in a case, although it has not and could have not been specifically raised in the pleadings owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case. O SAIFU KHAN v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD, 4 O. L. J. 305 456

POSSESSION, suit for—Benamidar, whether can sue 610

PRACTICE of Calcutta High Court, whether to be followed by Patna High Court.

Where there is a general practice sanctioned by concurrent decisions in Calcutta the Patna High Court will not depart from it. PAT MAHAMAYA PRASAD SINGH v. SUKHDIYA KUAR, 1 P. L. W. 759, (1917) PAT. 191 517

PRE-EMPTION—Custom—Wajib-ul-arz, interpretation of.

A wajib-ul-arz of 1840 recorded a right of pre-emption in the case of mortgages to lambardars and to co-sharers while the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1882 was of a totally different nature. There was no reference to mortgages and the lambardars were dropped out altogether and the right was given to an own brother irrespective of whether he was a co-sharer or not, then to near relations, then to co-sharers in the same lambardari and then to other co-sharers:

Held, that under the circumstances no custom of pre-emption was established by the wajib-ul-arz. A MAHABALI v. SAHDEO 73

Decree, conditional upon payment into Court, compliance with—Mortgage of subject-matter of decree by decree-holder 35

Hindu Law—Rishtedar qaribi, grandfather's brother's daughter's son, whether is.

A grandfather's brother's daughter's son is a rishtedar qaribi. A SARJU DUBE v. BADRI NARAIN 595

Mortgage by conditional sale—Decree absolute—Possession—Cause of action—Limitation.

A mortgage by way of conditional sale was executed on the 3rd of June 1909. A decree absolute was made with respect to the mortgage on the 13th of June 1914, and possession was given on the 26th of February 1915. A suit for pre-emption with respect to the property was instituted on the 5th of October 1915. The custom of pre-emption as proved by an entry in the wajib-ul-arz referred to transfers and not to any order of Court making a decree absolute or granting possession:

Held, that the suit was barred by time inasmuch as the plaintiff's right, if any, accrued at the time of the original transfer, i.e., in 1909 and not at the time at which possession was given under the decree absolute, as there was no right to get possession as the result of the decree absolute or the order for possession of the Court. A SUBA SINGH v. MAHABIR SINGH, 15 A. L. J. 514 461

Partial pre-emption.

A pre-emptor is not entitled to choose what part of the property sold he will exercise his right of pre-emption in respect of. He must, if at all, pre-empt the whole of the property which is the subject-matter of the sale. A BRIJ NARAIN RAI v. RAM DHARI RAO 40

Re-sale to vendor before suit, effect of Right of pre-emption, whether defeated.

A claim to pre-emption cannot be defeated by the re-sale of the property to the original vendor, even though the re-sale takes place before a suit for pre-emption is instituted. P IMAMI v. ALLAH DIYA, 99 P. W. R. 1917 767

PRE-EMPTION conclud.

Single proprietor, acquiring entire village, effect of—Custom, whether continues to exist.

Custom means a practice prevailing amongst a certain community and if that community has been reduced to a single individual, it is impossible that the practice can any longer exist.

Therefore, where once an entire village has come into the ownership of a single individual, that individual is entitled to dispose of his property to any one he pleases without its being subject to any right of pre-emption, unless the sale is made expressly subject to such right. A KAMER-UN-NISSA BIBI v. SUGHRA BIBI, 15 A. L. J. 422; 39 A. 480 427

PRESIDENCY SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT (XV OF 1882), Ss. 1, 35—Foreign Courts, decrees of, whether executable by Presidency Small Cause Courts—Registrar, power of, to issue process—Jurisdiction 670 PRESIDENCY TOWNS INSOLVENCY ACT (III OF 1909), S. 13 (6).

It is only when the petitioning creditor's debt is disputed that the Court can stay proceedings under section 13 (6) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. B In re SHIVLAL RATHI, 19 Bom. L. R. 365 207

S. 21, Adjudication order, ex parte—Adjustment, subsequent, with creditors—Annulment of adjudication—"Payment in full", meaning of—Creditor, duty of.

A man who has been adjudicated an insolvent ex parte has a right to have the matter argued in Court.

A creditor has no right to get an insolvent adjudicated insolvent and then to receive from him a sum in adjustment of his claim. He is not entitled to use his petition as a lever to secure preferential treatment for himself.

It is not permissible for an insolvent, once an act of insolvency has been committed, to say that the act was discounted because he had gone round to his admitted creditors and forced upon them a compromise or adjustment. That is not a payment in full within the meaning of section 21 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Such payment must be in cash in full of the claims and the insolvent cannot escape the result of the adjudicating order and prevent the Court from inquiring fully into his affairs by adjusting his claims and getting the creditors to accept less than what they considered due to them, nor by thus getting a receipt in full can he then contend that his debts have been paid in full, and the adjudication order should be annulled. That can only be done by a composition or scheme of arrangement under the Act. B In re SHIVLAL RATHI, 19 Bom. L. R. 365 207

S. 36—Court, power of—Examination—Application, contents of—Order refusing application, grounds of.

That litigation may ultimately ensue between the Official Assignee and the party to be examined under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is no ground for refusing an order for examination under that section.

PRESIDENCY TOWNS INSOLVENCY ACT—concl'd

When the Official Assignee applies for the examination of a person under section 36 of the Act, he should state shortly the nature of the information likely to be given by the person sought to be examined and the dealings or properties of the insolvent to which such information will relate.

An order for the examination of a person under section 36 should not be made upon the allegation in the Official Assignee's petition that the person sought to be examined appears capable of giving information respecting the insolvent's dealings and properties

The powers of the Court are very wide under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and no limit has been fixed by the section during which the powers may be exercised. Although the Court would in using these powers be careful to see that they are not used unduly and unnecessarily after a considerable time has elapsed from the time of the discharge of the insolvent, still there is nothing in the Act to limit the exercise of the powers to the period before the discharge. C In re HARIPADA RAKSHIT, 44 C. 374

94

— S 83.

The position of an Official Assignee in Madras differs from that of an Official Receiver in the muffasil. The Official Assignee may sue and be sued by the name of the Official Assignee of the property of the insolvent without mentioning his own name under section 83 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, whereas there is no corresponding provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act. M KAMAKRISHNA IYER v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, TINNEVELLY, 5 L. W. 507; 32 M. L. J. 520

170

PRIMOGENITURE, lineal, rule as to succession by 469

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—Agent for sale of goods — Delivery order received from broker—Payment to broker, whether discharges agent.

799

— Agent's obligation to render accounts, scope of.

The obligation of an agent to render an account of his agency and to account for money received by him is not merely confined to rendering of accounts of what has been done with the moneys, but includes also the payment of any balance which might be found due from him upon taking accounts. C KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. SARWAN LAL, 25 C. L. J. 335; 21 L. W. N. 591 — Agent personally liable—Principal, undisclosed—Suit against agent—Suit, subsequent, against principal, whether maintainable.

359

194

— Manager of Bank, powers of Bank, whether can be sued by its Manager—Plaint, amendment of, by claim for relief against Manager personally in alternative—Liability of Manager.

A Bank is a limited company and it can be sued only in its own corporate personality. It cannot sue or be sued in the name of its Manager and a suit against a Bank by its Manager means at best only that it is proposed to serve the Manager.

In such a suit, the Manager cannot be treated as a party already on the record who can be made personally liable.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—cont'd.

An application to amend the plaint by insertion of a prayer for relief against the Manager in the alternative should be refused, though he can be added as a party independently.

The trial of the suit must be restricted to an enquiry into the question of the Bank's liability and the Manager's conduct can affect it only in so far as he may be found to have acted within the scope of his authority. M CHALAPURAM BANK, LTD. v. ZAMORIN RAJA AVERGAL, (1917) M. W. N. 359 — Power-of-attorney, construction of—"First production," effect of—Attorney, whether bound to produce document every time power delegated is sought to be exercised—Revocation.

549

One G held a contract from the defendants for certain work to be done for them. After some negotiations with the plaintiffs he wrote to the defendants' agent on the 15th October 1910, stating that he was giving a power-of-attorney to plaintiffs to sign for all payments on his behalf and saying that such power-of-attorney was to hold good till the work was finished. Thereupon the defendants' agent informed the plaintiffs that all payments due to G. will be made to them on production of G's power-of-attorney in their favour. G. executed the power-of-attorney on the 18th of October, authorising the plaintiffs to recover all sums due to him from the defendant on the contract.

Plaintiffs, having made certain advances to G., claimed payment from the defendants under the terms of the power-of-attorney, but were met by the plea that nothing was due to G. at the time when the power-of-attorney was produced:

Held, (1) that the power-of-attorney was in fact an assignment in the plaintiffs' favour and the defendants' agent should have ceased to make payments to G. after it was first produced;

(2) that according to the terms of the agreement, the power-of-attorney could not be cancelled till the work was finished and the accounts finally settled and that, therefore, a letter from G. dated the 1st January 1911 to the defendants' agent cancelling the power-of-attorney did not exempt the defendants from the liability created under the agreement;

(3) that the defendants were consequently liable for all payments made to G. after the date of the first production of the power-of-attorney. P BUTA MAL-LACHMAN DAS v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 105 P. L. R. 1917; 86 P. W. R. 1917

280

— Pro-note executed by general agent—Liability of principal.

A lady executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of a relation, which gave him authority to borrow money on her behalf, but only for necessity. The said relation borrowed money on a promissory note, in which he described himself as a relation and agent of the lady, who was no party to its execution. The note described that the money was borrowed to meet the funeral expenses of one of her relatives and of her husband, who was the brother of the executant, and for personal expenses;

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—concl'd.

Held, that the lady was not liable on the note, inasmuch as it could not be inferred that the money was borrowed on her behalf, or if so borrowed was borrowed for necessity. O MUHAMDI BEGAM v. DURGA PRASAD, 4 O. L. J. 299 452

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—Suit against principal and surety—Decree ex parte against principal, whether can be set aside without discharging surety—Plaintiff withdrawing suit against principal, effect of 400

PROBATE, grant of, delay in—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Ss. 19 (H) (4), 19 (I)—Motion of Collector, delay in, effect of 576

PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT (V of 1881), S. 55—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Will—Probate, application for, withdrawal of—Court, duty of—O. XXIII, r. 1, applicability of, to Probate proceedings.

An application for Probate cannot legally be disposed of by a compromise. The law imposes on the Court the duty of determining whether the Will is genuine or not.

Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to an application for Probate. If an executor improperly withdraws an application for Probate, he is not precluded from again undertaking the discharge of his duty in obtaining the finding of the Court on the genuineness of the Will.

FAT JUGESHWAR NATH SAHAI v. JAGATDHARI PRASAD, (1917) PAT. 192; 2 P. L. J. 535 345

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT (III OF 1907), S. 5 Application—Omission to disclose dismissal of previous application, effect of.

The mere omission to disclose in an application for adjudication that a previous application by the same applicant has been dismissed is not a sufficient reason within the meaning of section 15 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for dismissing the application. A MUHAMMAD SHIS v. MAHABIR PRASAD, 15 A. L. J. 572 445

—Ss. 16, cl. (2) (b), 22—Receiver, suit against, by third person—Leave of Court, whether necessary.

There is no general rule of law making it necessary for a plaintiff to obtain leave of the Insolvency Court before suing the Receiver in insolvency.

A plaintiff who is not a creditor but a third person claiming adversely to the insolvent is not affected by the provisions of section 6, clause (2) (b), of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and is not, therefore, bound to obtain leave of the Court before suing the Receiver. S HALIMA v. MATHRADAS RAMCHAND, 10 S. L. R. 179 122

—S. 16 (2) (a) 544

—S. 18 (3)—Court, power of—Sale, benami, by insolvent—Receiver, possession of—Jurisdiction.

Under section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Court is competent to order that the property of the insolvent should be placed in the possession of the Receiver and to enquire whether the property is in reality in the possession of the insolvent and whether the Receiver is entitled to obtain possession of it. Where a sale of the insolvent's property is a mere benami transaction, it is not necessary for the insolvent or the Receiver who steps into his shoes to have the sale set aside and cancelled in order to maintain his possession over the property. A JAGRUP SAHU v. RAMANAND SAHU, 15 A. L. J. 738 373

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT—concl'd.

—S. 22—Receiver, suit against, by third person—Leave of Court, whether necessary.

Section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not in any way prohibit the enforcement of rights by suit without the leave of the Court. S HALIMA v. MATHRADAS RAMCHAND, 10 S. L. R. 179 122

—S. 27—Composition—Debt, proof of—Schedule of creditors, settling of—Creditors, right of vote of.

In insolvency cases the proof of debts means that the creditor shall have proved his debt in some of the ways prescribed by the Provincial Insolvency Act and that his name shall have been put by the Court on the schedule of creditors.

In insolvency matters the schedule of creditors should be settled at as early a date as possible and where an application under section 27 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is made before a proposal for composition is finally accepted, no creditor is entitled to vote whose debt has not been proved and whose name has not been admitted on to the schedule by the Judge. A CHANDAN LAL v. KHEMRAJ, 15 A. L. J. 538 156

—S. 46 (1)—"May appeal", "shall be final", meanings of—Remedy provided by s. 46 (1), whether cumulative or substitutional for regular suit.

The words "may appeal" in section 46 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act mean that a party aggrieved with an order may, if he thinks fit, prefer an appeal against it to the High Court but is not bound to do so.

The words "shall be final" used in section 46 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act do not signify that the decision of the Insolvency Court cannot be impeached in a regular suit, but they simply emphasise that no second appeal lies against an appellate order of the District Judge.

A person whose property is claimed by another person has, under the common law, the right of instituting a suit against the latter to establish his title, and this remedy has not been extinguished by the Provincial Insolvency Act. So that where the Official Receiver takes into his possession property as belonging to the insolvent, which a third party claims as his own, the latter can bring a suit against the Official Receiver in a Civil Court to establish his right. P DUNI CHAND v. MUHAMMAD HUSAIN, 22 P. R. 1917 220

—Ss. 61, 67 170

PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT (IX OF 1887), S. 25—Revision, grounds for.

Where the decree of a Court of Small Causes, which must also include the judgment, involves a clear error of law, the High Court has power to interfere with the decree, but the error of law must be a substantial one and the Court must be satisfied that there has been a failure of justice.

Where the point for determination is obvious, the omission to state it in the judgment cannot be deemed to have caused a failure of justice. L B KO KYAW ZAN v. DAW MYA 890

PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT—
concl'd.

SCH. II, ART. 7—'Apportionment of rent', meaning of—Suit for apportioned rent on fraction of demised premises—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Transfer of lessor's interest, effect of—Right to rent after transfer, when amount payable on fixed dates—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 36, 2 (d)—High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Appeal, second Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J—A suit for arrears of rent due under a lease after an apportionment has been made, in consequence of the interest of the lessor having been transferred in portions of the demised premises, either by simultaneous agreement between the parties or by one party with the consent of the other, is not a suit for apportionment coming under clause 7 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Even if the apportionment was made only by the plaintiff and he alleges it to be an equitable apportionment binding on the defendant, a suit which prays for the recovery of a definite sum cannot be called a suit for an apportionment of rent.

The nature of the plaintiff's suit has to be found from the relief claimed by him and the fact that the Court may have to give findings as to the proper apportionment of rent does not alter its character.

Where the apportioned rent claimed is below Rs. 500 there is no right of second appeal.

Per Spencer, J., (dissenting.)—Article 7 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act takes it out of the power of a Small Cause Court to adjudicate upon a question of what is a fair and equitable rent to be paid by a tenant to his landlord, having regard to the yield, fertility and extent of a holding and similar considerations, which is rather within the province of a Revenue Court for estates or a Court of original jurisdiction in other cases

A decision on what would be a fair and proper proportion out of a whole rent to a fraction of demised premises in consequence of the lessor ceasing to have an interest in the remainder is beyond the cognizance of the Small Cause Court.

All rents are, upon the transfer of the interest of the lessor, to be deemed to accrue due from day to day.

Where, before the date on which the rent becomes payable, the lessor ceases to have an interest in the land leased, he has no claim for rent subsequent to that date as there is no privity of interest between himself and the tenant. M VEMA RANGIAH CHETTY v. VAJRAVELU MUDALIAR, 6 L. W. 80 655

ART. 35 (g)—Suit to recover money advanced as loan on condition of marriage—Jurisdiction.

A suit to recover money advanced by way of loan, on condition that the debtor would marry his daughter to the creditor's nephew and on failure to do so would pay back the money, falls under Article 35 (g), Schedule II, of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, cognizable on the regular side. O RAMESHWAR v. GAURI, 4 O. L. J. 171 67

PUNJAB COURTS ACT (III OF 1914), Ss. 37, 44—Jurisdiction to transfer suits—Senior Subordinate Judge, powers of.

A Subordinate Judge has no jurisdiction to exercise the powers conferred by section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, unless such powers have been delegated to him by the District Judge with the previous sanction of the Local Government as provided by sections 37 and 44 of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914. M ALI NAKI v. DAMODAR DAS, 33 P. W. R. 1917 111

—S. 41

176, 772, 1003

PUNJAB LIMITATION (ANCESTRAL LAND ALIENATION) ACT (I OF 1900). SCH.—Alienation—Suit to recover land alienated—Limitation, commencement of.

In a suit to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor during his lifetime, limitation runs primarily from the date on which the alienation is attested.

Plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands alleging that an alienation thereof by their father was without consideration and necessity. It appears that the original alienation was a mortgage executed in November 1897, which recited that if the property was not redeemed within two years it should be deemed to be sold. The mortgage not having been redeemed, the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession on the 9th March 1901. This suit was compromised on the understanding that if the mortgagor failed to redeem within a further period allowed to him the mortgagee was to get possession. The mortgagee accordingly took possession on the 19th August 1901, mutation of the proprietary right being effected on the 29th June 1903. On the 31st of March 1915, the mortgagor's sons instituted the present suit for possession:

Held, that the alienation by sale which the plaintiffs sought to attack not having been mutated till the 29th June 1903, time began to run from that date and the plaintiffs' suit was, therefore, not barred P JAGAT RAM v. DHARAM SINGH 446

PUNJAB PRE-EMPTION ACT (II OF 1905). S. 29—Delivery of possession by attornment of tenants and by pointing out land sold—Pre-emption, suit for—Limitation.

In a suit for pre-emption it appeared that the sale sought to be pre-empted was an oral one and had taken place some six months prior to 26th July 1907, and that possession was, in June 1907, delivered to the vendors by getting the tenants to attorn to the vendees and by pointing out on the spot each and every field which had been sold. The suit having been instituted on the 1st October 1909:

Held, that the vendees came into physical possession of the land sold in June 1907 within the meaning of section 29 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act and that the suit having been instituted more than one year after that date was, therefore, time-barred. P BISHEN SINGH v. FEROZ CHAND, 33 P. W. R. 1917; 13 P. L. R. 1917 618

PUNJAB TENANCY ACT (XVI OF 1887), Ss. 4 (12) 70 (3) (j)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit by water-carrier to recover dues—Village cess.

Village cesses such as haq buha, poochh baki, etc., are cesses leviable by the proprietors of a village from non-proprietary residents or kammis and are dues leviable irrespective of any personal service rendered by them.

A suit by a water-carrier against the proprietary body of the village to recover dues as payment for personal services based upon an entry in the wajib-ul-arz is not a suit to recover a village cess, and is, therefore, cognisable by a Civil and not by a Revenue Court. P. AZIM v. Gopi, 44 P. W. R. 1917; 74 P. R. 1917 487

PUTNI REGULATION VIII OF 1819—Collector, whether has judicial capacity—Collector, power of, to make order as to costs in proceedings before him.

Under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 the Collector has power, when an application is made under the Regulation for the purpose of realising the rent in arrears, to determine the actual rent due and has a quasi-judicial capacity, and, therefore, has jurisdiction to direct in what manner the costs of the proceedings before him ought to be borne. C. BHUPENDRA KUMAR SARKAR v. KISSORI DAS 614

S. 15, CL. 2, whether affected by Act VIII B. C. of 1865, s. 3.

Clause 2 of section 15 of the Putni Regulation has not been affected by section 3 of Act VIII B. C. of 1865, so that a purchaser of a putni tenure seeking to proceed under that clause must apply to the District Judge, and not to the Collector. C. MONMOTH NATH v. DISTRICT JUDGE, 24-PERCANNAS, 25 C. L. J. 535; 44 C. 715 368

QUESTION OF LAW—Adverse possession, whether question of law 420

RAILWAYS ACT (IX OF 1890), Ss. 68, 69, 113, 120 122—Travelling without ticket, whether offence—Intent to defraud—"Railway", whether includes railway carriage—Railway servants, duty of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 323.

The main and primary purpose of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Railways Act is to prevent persons from travelling in fraud of the Company without having paid the necessary fare, and the obligation to show the ticket, when required, is subsidiary only to such primary purpose.

Section 68 prohibits travelling without a pass or ticket, but so to travel without intent to defraud is not a criminal offence.

But a person so travelling is liable under section 113 of the Railways Act to pay on demand by any Railway servant an excess charge, which is somewhat in the nature of a penalty.

There is no provision in the Railways Act for ejecting passengers except in certain circumstances, such as are specified in section 120 of the Act.

The expression "railway" in section 122 of the Railways Act does not include a railway carriage, and the section does not, therefore, apply to the case of a passenger travelling in a railway carriage.

Railway servants are public servants and they must act within the four corners of their statutory powers.

RAILWAYS ACT—concl.

Ticket collectors and checkers are expected to conduct themselves with restraint and self-control. C. MOHAMMED HOSAIN v. FARLEY, 44 C. 279; 25 C. L. J. 610; 18 Cr. L. J. 647 295

— Ss. 113, 120, 122 295

RAILWAY COMPANY, liability of, to compensate consignor—Risk note exonerating Company from liability except for loss of complete package, whether contrary to public policy 626

RECEIVER, possession of, nature of.

The possession of a Receiver must be regarded as possession on behalf of the party entitled to the property as finally settled in the suit and where the suit is against a defendant who was in possession and is dismissed, the possession of the Receiver must be regarded as on behalf of the defendant and it does not suspend the operation of adverse possession. M. SUBBAIYA PANDARAM v. MUHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARAYAR, 21 M. L. T. 62; 5 L. W. 690, 32 M. L. J. 85 50

REGISTRATION after period of limitation, validity of.

The registration of a deed is not invalid and ineffectual merely because the deed was presented for registration by the grantee without the consent of the grantor after the expiry of the period limited for the purpose, and the delay was accounted for by the production of a false certificate of the illness of the grantor. C. PROBHA CHANDRA SHOME v. SHASHADHAR KUMAR GHOSE 215

REGISTRATION ACT (XVI OF 1908), S. 16—Rajinamas and kabuliyats, whether require registration—Occupancy rights, transfer of.

Rajinamas and kabuliyats, that is, transactions with regard to the khata, are the general accompaniment of transfers of ownership of occupancy rights. The transfer, however, of the beneficial ownership is a transaction not between the khatedar and his superior holder, but the khatedar and the incoming occupant.

A rajinama and kabuliyat are documents between the occupant and his superior holder and not documents between the transferor and the transferee. They recite the transfer which has taken place, but they themselves do not purport to operate as transferring any interest to another.

Even if they can be said to fall within section 17 of the Registration Act as operating to extinguish an interest in immoveable property, they are not required to be registered unless it is shown that the interest extinguished is of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards.

Per Beaman, J.—The conjoint effect of a rajinama and a kabuliyat, between a mortgagor and a mortgagee, or between a mortgagor and a third party, is to indicate that in the first case the equity of redemption has been extinguished and that in the second case it has been transferred. B. IMAM IBRAHIM v. BHAV APPAJI JADHAV, 19 Bom. L. R. 329; 41 B. 510 68

— Ss. 17, 49 "Transaction," unilateral, whether amounts to intention to become divided in status Registration 56

— S. 17 (b)—Tasfiinama praying for decree in accordance therewith, whether compulsorily registrable—Intention.

REGISTRATION ACT—concl'd.

Where a document stamped with an eight-annas Court-fee stamp headed "tasfianama ba adalat District Judge, Ludhiana," commenced by describing the parties in detail and saying that they had various disputes between themselves and that certain property in the possession of the defendants shall be given to the plaintiff and concluded with a prayer to the Court that a decree to that effect may be passed in favour of the plaintiff:

Held, that the intention of the parties was that the document should be presented to the Court in order that a decree should be passed by the Court in accordance therewith, and that, therefore, it was a petition addressed to the Court and as such did not require registration. P HARI CHAND v. MAGHI MAL, 95 P. W. R. 1917; 112 P. L. R. 1917; 78 P. R. 1917 675

—S. 17 (1) (b)—Letter reciting certain facts and delivery of possession, whether compulsorily registrable.

A letter reciting certain facts and saying that the writer has given possession of certain property to a certain individual and has ceased to have anything to do with it, is not an instrument which of itself operates or purports to create or declare any right, title or interest in the property and does not, therefore, require registration. P KAJU MAL v. PARMA NAND 455

—S. 17, CLS. (1) (c), (2) (XI)—Endorsement unregistered, of payment on mortgage-deed, admissibility of.

Endorsements of payments on mortgage-deeds are admissible in evidence, though unregistered. They fall within the scope of clause (2) XI, and not of clause (1) (c) of section 17 of the Registration Act. M BOMMANABOYINA KOTINAGULU v. RAMARAJU ANKAYYA, 15 A. L. J. 645; 2 P. L. W. 101; 3 M. L. J. 68; 26 C. L. J. 143; 19 Bom. L. R. 715; (1917) M. W. N. 628; 40 M. 793; 6 L. W. 501 650

—S. 49 Mortgage—Redemption suit—Compromise, non-registration of, effect of 121

—Ss. 49 17, "Transaction," unilateral, whether amounts to intention to become divided in status—Registration.

Where such unilateral declaration is embodied in an instrument in writing prior to a division by metes and bounds, it does not amount to a "transaction" within the meaning of section 4 of the Registration Act and is admissible in evidence without registration. M SIKHAMANI PANDITHAR v. AMMANI AMMAL 36

—S. 77—"Refusal to register", meaning of—Suit to enforce registration—Jurisdiction of Court—Limitation.

An order of a Registrar refusing to accept a document for registration on the ground that it was time-barred, is a 'refusal to register' within the meaning of section 77 of the Registration Act, and entitles the aggrieved party to sue for the enforcement of registration under the section.

There is no substantial distinction between refusal to accept a document for registration and a refusal to register within the meaning of section 77 read with sections 76 and 72.

The time for filing a suit under the section should be computed from the date of the appellate order of the Registrar refusing to register under section

REGISTRATION ACT—concl'd.

72 or section 76, and not from the date of any prior order refusing to extend time. M GANGADARA MUDALI v. SAMBASIVA MUDALI, 33 M. L. J. 54; 40 M. 799 192
REGULATION. See PUTNI REGULATION.

RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS ACT (XX OF 1863),
Ss. 7, 9, 10, 14—Religious Endowments—Appointment of member of Committee—Appointment by Civil Court, whether administrative or judicial act.

Section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, does not appear to empower a Civil Court to direct the remaining members of a Committee appointed under that Act, when they have failed to hold an election for the choice of a new member, to hold such an election. It can direct them to fill up the vacancy, but such filling up is then their own act.

A proceeding of the Civil Court under this section is a judicial and not merely an administrative or ministerial act. In such matters the Civil Court exercises its powers as a Court of Law, not merely as a persona designata whose determinations are not to be treated as judgments of a legal Tribunal. P C BALAKRISHNA UDAYAR v. VASUDEVA AIYAR, 15 A. L. J. 645; 2 P. L. W. 101; 3 M. L. J. 68; 26 C. L. J. 143; 19 Bom. L. R. 715; (1917) M. W. N. 628; 40 M. 793; 6 L. W. 501 650

RENT-FREE UNDER-PROPRIETARY HOLDING
—Resumption suit, whether maintainable.

An under-proprietary holding, whether rent free or otherwise, being heritable and transferable, is, by its very nature, not capable of resumption. When it is rent free, the remedy of the superior proprietor is to apply to the Settlement Officer to have it assessed to rent under section 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, unless the assessment is barred by a previous judicial decision or otherwise. If it is assessed to rent, and the rent is not regularly paid, the superior proprietor can only bring it to sale in execution of a decree for his arrears but cannot eject the under-proprietor.

The principle underlying the resumption or assessment is that the State is entitled by the ancient law of the country to a certain amount of the produce of the soil, for which revenue payable in cash has now been substituted, and it cannot be deprived of the same by any action of the owner of the soil, and that the latter is similarly entitled to recoup himself from the occupier or actual cultivator, unless the effect of the recoupment is to stultify his own contracts for valuable consideration. O SHANKAR SAHAI v. GAJADHAR PRASAD, 20 O. C. 171; 4 O. L. J. 49 200

RENT SUIT—Alternative claim for money-decree against plaintiff's co-sharers, maintainability of.

A suit is maintainable in the form in which a decree for arrears of rent is claimed against the tenant-defendants, with an alternative prayer at the same time for a money-decree against the other set of defendants—the co-sharers of the plaintiff—in case it is held that they have realised the entire rent from the tenant-defendants. C BINODE LAL v. PREO NATH 173

—Bhauhi land—Produce, quantity of, proof of—Road-cess return, admission in, value of—Average rate of rent.

Where a plaintiff sues for arrears of rent of bhauhi land, he should be allowed to prove the actual produce for the years in suit and its prices. An admission of the rate of rent in a road-cess return some years prior to the years for which rent is claimed is not conclusive as to the average rate. PAT RAM SAHI v. MAHABIR GIR, 2 P. L. W. 60 606

RENT SUIT—concl.

— Decision as to annual rent payable—Subsequent suit—Res judicata 460

— Rent, reduction of, claim for, on ground of non-repair of irrigation works—Set-off, equitable, whether can be allowed in suit for rent 238

RES JUDICATA. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, S. 11.

— Appeal—Finding on particular point against party in whose favour decree is made 771

— Appeal—Withdrawal of suit 553

— Malikana, suit for recovery of.

Where the plaintiffs' claim for malikana is established by suit, its denial by the opposite party in a subsequent suit is barred by res judicata. PAT SAIYID- UDDIN v. AVADH BEHARI SINGH, 2 P. L. W. 64 864

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS, suit for—Legal cruelty—Liquor, use of.

Where it was found that a husband was addicted to the use of alcohol and that occasionally he beat his wife when he was the worse for liquor:

Held, that these facts fell short of establishing legal cruelty, so as to debar him from suing successfully to obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. O GILLI v. HIRA LAL, 4 O. L. J. 112 674

REVIEW,—Discretion of subordinate Court—Revision—High Court, power of 403

REVISION (CIVIL). See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, Ss. 115, 439.

— (CRIMINAL, application for—Limitation—Calcutta High Court—Practice.

An application for revision to the High Court ought to be made at the earliest possible moment. But the rule is not inflexible, and the High Court has reserved to itself the power, when exceptional circumstances are proved, to depart from it.

The usual practice of the Calcutta High Court is to allow 60 days' time to an accused person for making an application for revision, counted from the date of the conviction or the order complained of. But the time which is occupied in prosecuting with diligence his application to the Sessions Judge for a reference to the High Court and obtaining his decision should not be included in counting the 60 days but should be added to the 60 days just in the same way as the time necessary for obtaining copies of judgments, decrees and orders. C RAJ CHANDRA BHUIYA v. EMPEROR, 25 C. L. J. 564; 18 CR. L. J. 694 694

RIWAJ-I-AM, entry in, construction of.

An entry in the riwaj-i-am must be construed as being strictly limited to the case which is set out in the question under reply. P MOHAMMAD BAKHSI v. KARM ILAH, 104 P. L. R. 1917; 82 P. W. R. 1917 246

SALE—Consideration, non-payment of, whether renders sale void—Intention 489

SCHEDULED DISTRICTS ACT (XIV OF 1874) 174

SONTHAL PERGANNAS REGULATION (III OF 1872), S. 6—Contract for evading provisions of section, whether enforceable—Sonthal Pergannas.

In the Sonthal Pergannas a contract between a borrower and a lender for the repayment with interest of the principal sum borrowed, which is really a subtle device for the purpose of evading the provisions of section 6 of Regulation III of 1872, is not invalid, and the Court ought to enforce the contract in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation regulating the rate at which interest is to be allowed.

SONTHAL PERGANNAS REGULATION—concl.

Rs. 550 were borrowed in the Sonthal Pergannas on condition of repayment by 550 maunds of paddy within four months. It was found that on the due date of repayment the price of paddy was Rs. 2 per maund:

Held, that though the condition contravened the provisions of Regulation III of 1872, still having regard to the real meaning of the contract the plaintiff was entitled to recover the principal and 25 per cent. interest from the date of the loan up to the date of repayment mentioned in the contract and in addition interest at 12 per cent from the date of repayment mentioned in the contract up to the date on which the suit was instituted and then from the date of the institution of the suit at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until realisation. C ATIKULLA v. AZIMUDDIN 415

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—Agreement to sell by manager—Minor members, contract on behalf and for benefit of.

No specific performance of an agreement to sell by the manager of a joint Hindu family can be decreed, unless it is shown that it is in the interest of the minor members of the family and is beneficial to them. PAT HARI CHARAN KUAR v. KAULA RAI, 1 P. L. W. 587; (1917) PAT. 201; 2 P. L. J. 53 142

SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT (I OF 1877), applicability of, to Sonthal Parganas Specific performance, prayer for—Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874).

The Sonthal Parganas being a Scheduled District within the meaning of Act XIV of 1874, the Specific Relief Act does not proprio vigore extend to that area.

Although the Act is not applicable to the Sonthal Parganas, a prayer for specific performance of a contract can be granted upon the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

The Specific Relief Act has given the Courts a new power, but the exercise of that power which is specially declared by the Statute to be discretionary ought to be jealously watched. PAT SATYA NARAYAN CHAKRAVARTY v. DWARKA NATH SARDH, 2 P. L. J. 379; 1 P. L. W. 738 174

— Ss. 19, 27 429

— S. 27 (b)—Specific performance—Contract of sale—Notice of sale before registration.

If a defendant to a suit for specific performance, has notice of the sale to the plaintiff before the registration of his own contract of sale is completed he is liable to the plaintiff under section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act. A NEHAL SINGH v. SEWA RAM 128

— S. 42—Suit for declaration of share in decree, maintainability of 255

— S. 54—Easement—Right to catch fish—Owner of lower land, whether can restrain owner of higher land from catching fish in his own land—Injunction.

SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT—concl'd.

The plaintiff, who had some paddy fields on the lower levels of a tract of paddy land, had for over 20 years openly, peaceably and uninterruptedly caught fish in a trap set on his own land. The defendant set a similar trap by the side of a tank belonging to him, and caught some of the fish which would otherwise have come to the plaintiff's trap, whereupon the latter brought a suit to establish his right of easement and for damages, and for an injunction restraining the former from catching fish in his trap.

Held, that the plaintiff could not acquire an easement by catching fish on his own land and was not entitled to restrain the defendant from catching fish on his own land.

A man, who has exercised the natural right of catching fish in his own property for upwards of 20 years, does not thereby acquire the right to prevent everybody else holding land in the vicinity from exercising a similar right.

Every person has a natural right to catch fish, which are res nullius, while on his land. C KALANDAR MANDAL v. AJIMUDEE MANDAL, 21 C. W. N. 599 135

STAMP ACT (II OF 1899), Ss. 62 (b), 68 (c)—Offence, ingredients necessary for—Application for loan in prescribed form recommended by surety and approved by Manager of creditor Bank, whether agreement which should bear stamp.

An application was made to a Bank for a loan on a prescribed form, which contained columns intended to show the signature of the person recommending the loan or undertaking any responsibility on behalf of the applicant. A person recommended the loan by saying "I guarantee the payment." The accused, who was the Manager of the Bank, approved the proposal by saying in the last column of the form that the application for the loan should be granted. No stamp was affixed to the form:

Held, (1) that the words "I guarantee the payment" signed by the person who recommended the loan did not represent a completely executed security bond, so that the Manager by his signature in the last column of the form could not be held to have appended his signature to that security bond by way of acceptance thereof. Therefore, the conviction of the Manager under section 62 (b) of the Stamp Act could not be supported;

(2) that the Secretary of the Bank, who advanced the loan to the applicant on his executing that bond, could not be convicted under section 68 (c) of the Stamp Act, as his duties in connection with the transaction were purely ministerial and he did not, in fact, accept the proposal for the loan;

The essential question in a case under section 68 (c) of the Stamp Act is whether the act complained of is a device intended to defraud the Government of duty payable in respect of a document. C RAJESWAR BAGCHI v. EMPEROR, 21 C. W. N. 755 18 Cr. L. J. 725 725

STATE, right of, to produce of soil in place of cash for payment of revenue, scope of 260

SUCCESSION CERTIFICATE ACT (VIII OF 1889) — Succession certificate, application for, rejection of—Review—Appeal, when allowed.

SUCCESSION CERTIFICATE ACT—concl'd.

No appeal lies against an order rejecting an application for review of an order granting a succession certificate. But an appeal will lie from an order rejecting an application for the grant of a succession certificate. A NARAIN DEI v. PARMESHARI 124

—S. 6—Assignee of representative of deceased, whether can apply.

A succession certificate may be granted to the assignee of the representative of a deceased person. PAT RAMCHARITER SAHU v. RAM NARAIN SAHU, 2 P. L. J. 350 96

SUIT in name of vendor after sale of his interest, maintainability of 506

SURETY for consolidated amount made up of several, promissory notes, liability of—Cause of action.

Where a person makes himself liable as a surety for a consolidated amount, the amounts themselves having been borrowed under several promissory notes from time to time, the cause of action as against the surety arises on each of the dates on which the sums borrowed under the several promissory notes become payable. Where the cause of action is separate the liability of the surety is also separate with respect to each of the promissory notes. M GHULAMSA RAVUTHAR v. VISVANATHAN CHETTIAR, (19 7) M. W. N. 344; 5 L. W. 721 347

TALUQ, noabad—Tenure-holder, interest of, whether permanent and heritable.

The interest of a tenure-holder with regard to uncultivated lands of a noabad taluq is not permanent and heritable. Therefore, a tank in a noabad taluq, which is more or less silted up, and a portion of the waste land, can be settled by Government with a person other than the original tenure-holder. C MOHINI MOHAN GUHA v. JHANDA MIA CHOWKIDAR 596 TRANSFERS made by persons having no title, effect of 469

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT (IV OF 1882), Ss. 2 (d), 36 655

—S. 43—Tenancy by estoppel, when created 581

—Ss 49, 76 (f)—Mortgage—Agreement to keep mortgaged premises insured, failure to perform—Insurance effected by Receiver in mortgage suit—Money received under insurance policy, applicability of.

A mortgage-deed provided that during the continuance of the security the mortgagor should insure and keep insured the mortgaged premises, and that if he failed to do so, it would be lawful for the mortgagee to make payments necessary for the purpose and that such payments would be a charge upon the mortgaged premises. The mortgage-deed also provided that all sums of money received under and by virtue of any such insurance should be applied by the mortgagee, if so required by the mortgagor, in or towards substantially re-building, re-instating or repairing the said premises. Neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee insured the property, but the Receiver, appointed in the suit on the mortgage, under the Court's direction kept the property insured against any loss or damage by fire, for the benefit of all the parties to the suit. Before the property was brought to sale in execution of the mortgage decree it was destroyed by fire, whereupon the Receiver obtained under the policy of insurance a large sum of money:

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—contd.

Held, (1) that the money received by the Receiver was not governed by the terms of the mortgage-deed, inasmuch as the insurance was kept on foot by the Court through the Receiver as a matter of protection for the benefit of all persons who were parties to the mortgage suit, and not by the mortgagor or the mortgagee in accordance with their contract in the mortgage-deed;

(2) that the Court had ample discretion in directing in what manner the money so received should be laid out, and that the mortgagor could not claim that it should be laid out in restoring the premises that had been destroyed or damaged by fire. C DOOLY CHAND v. RAMESWAR SINGH 623

— S. 50 655

— S. 51—Trespasser in good faith, improving land—Owner, liability of, to pay costs of improvement 464

— S. 52—Lis pendens, doctrine of, scope of.

The wording of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act no doubt is general and is not restricted explicitly to the protection of those parties only who have been in active controversy with the transferor. But it cannot be read as a general prohibition against the subsequent agitation of every question, which arose in the litigation, between whomsoever it was decided. That reading would refuse full effect to the words "the rights of any other party," for the right protected cannot be treated as existing, like an obligation running with the property, independently of the party in whose favour it was decreed.

The doctrine of lis pendens operates only in favour of a plaintiff and cannot be invoked by a defendant.

There is no authority for the proposition that the scope of the doctrine of lis pendens must be limited to cases in which the doctrine of res judicata would apply to the transferor. M MANJESHWARA KRISHNAYA v. VASUDEVA MALLIA 826

— S. 52—Lis pendens—Execution sale pending suit by third party claiming title to property—Auction-purchaser, position of.

The principle of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable as much to involuntary sales in execution proceedings as to sales effected by act of parties during the pendency of a suit relating to the property sold.

Where certain property is sold in execution, pending the result of an appeal which an unsuccessful third party is prosecuting, asserting his title to the property proclaimed for sale, the doctrine of lis pendens applies to the execution sale, and the title acquired by the auction-purchaser is subject to the result of the said appeal, although the auction-purchaser is no party to it. O SATGUR DATAL v. NAND KUMAR, 4 O L J 135

— S. 53, applicability of—Fraudulent sale—Sale to defeat one creditor—Sale bona fide, for valid consideration, whether voidable.

Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act applies even though only one creditor is defrauded and hindered in realizing his debt.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—contd.

If there is a bona fide sale duly intended to be acted upon between the parties and the property passes from the vendor without any reservation to the vendee and the latter pays good and valuable consideration for the property, then even though it may have been intended to defeat the rights of the vendor's creditor in the realization of his debt, the creditor is not entitled to a declaration that the deed of sale is voidable as a fraud on him as a creditor of the vendor. PAT FAKIRA SINGH v. MAJHO SINGH, 2 P. L. J. 546

685

— S. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Preferential payment to creditor, whether fraudulent.

For all that is contained in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, a debtor may pay his debts in any order he pleases and prefer any creditor he chooses.

The mere fact that a debtor prefers one of his many creditors and executes a conveyance to him of his properties and does so of set purpose, would not stamp the transaction as a fraudulent transfer within the meaning of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. P C MINA KUMARI BIBI v. BIJOY SINGH, 1 P. L. W. 425; 5 L. W. 711; 32 M. L. J. 425; 21 C. W. N. 385; 21 M. L. T. 344; 15 A. L. J. 382; 25 C. L. J. 508; 19 Bom. L. R. 424; (1917) M. W. N. 473; 44 C. 662

242

— Ss. 54, 55—Alienation of specified properties of joint family, position of 429

— Ss. 57, 65 (d), 103 (j)—Lease—Mortgagee of lease-hold interest, liability of, for rent to lessor—Privity of estate.

A mortgagee with possession of a lease-hold interest is not liable to the lessor for rent on the English doctrine of privity of estate.

Privity of estate is a technical term of English Law and, under that law, no such privity arises unless the whole of the lessee's interest is assigned over. Where a subsidiary interest is carved out of the lessee's interest, no fresh privity arises. For instance, there is no privity of estate between a lessor and a sub-lessee. In India under section 57 of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgage of a lease-hold interest is not an out and out transfer of the mortgagor's interest, and, therefore, on the English doctrine no privity of estate can arise.

Privity of contract is personal privity and extends only to the person of the lessor and the person of the lessee, and the mere creation of a mortgage by the latter does not create a personal privity between the lessor and the mortgagee. M NOCHULIYIL EAZHU-VAN THEETHI'S SON v. ERALPOD RAJAH, 32 M. L. J. 442; 21 M. L. T. 401

841

— S. 58—"Specific immovable property."

There is no reason why a general description of the property should be held not to constitute a charge if the description, though wide, is not uncertain.

Semble—Difficulty might arise in the case of a mortgage from a general description of the mortgaged property, as a mortgage under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act must be of "specific immovable property." C SYAM PEARY DASSY v. EASTERN MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO., LTD.

865

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—contd.

——— S. 59—Mortgage, execution of—Executant, illiterate—Execution, proof of.

Where a mortgage-deed purports to have been executed by the executant's affixing his mark to the same, it must be proved not merely that the mark is that of the executant, but also that it was affixed to the deed in the presence of witnesses. A KA. SAIMDHAN v. MAKHDUM BAKHSI 191

——— S. 60, applicability of, to anomalous mortgages.

Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to all mortgages including anomalous mortgages within the meaning of section 98. C BADAL MOLLA v. CHEMAI MONDAL 894

——— S. 60—Clog on equity of redemption 863

——— S. 65 (d) — Mortgagor and lessor, rights of.

Per Spencer, J.—Section 65 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act deals only with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor and the mortgagee as between themselves. The rights and liabilities as between the mortgagor and his lessor are regulated by section 108 (j). M NOCHULIYIL EAZHUVAN THEETHI'S SON v. ERALPOD RAJAH, 32 M. L. J. 442; 21 M. L. T. 401 841

——— S. 76 623

——— S. 76—Mortgage accounts.

If owing to the fact that there have been acquisitions of the mortgaged property under the Land Acquisition Act, or other causes, there is some difficulty in identifying the mortgaged property, or if after identification the mortgagee is unable to give possession of the whole of the mortgaged property owing to some default on his part, the proper course is to debit the mortgagee with the value of the land in taking the mortgage accounts under section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act. M KOTTAYAT GOPALA MENON v. KOLAT NARAYANA KURUP, 5 L. W. 339; (1917) M. W. N. 289 70 ——— S. 76—Mortgagee taking possession on failure of mortgagor to pay mortgage money—Liability of mortgagor.

When during the continuance of a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the mortgagor, on the failure of the latter to pay the mortgage-money on the due date, the nature of the contract between the parties is not altered and the conditional mortgage is not transformed into a usufructuary mortgage; but what happens in essence is that the parties adopt a certain mode of satisfaction of the mortgage. Consequently no question arises in such a case as to the effect of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

The possession of the mortgagee thus taken cannot extinguish the title of the mortgagor till a decree absolute is made in a foreclosure suit properly framed for the purpose, and the mortgagee who remains in possession in this way is bound to appropriate his receipts from the mortgaged property towards the reduction of the mortgage-debt in view of the provisions of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act. C AFSAR SHAIK v. SAURAVA SUNDARI DAS, 25 C. L. J. 560 371

——— S. 98—Mortgage by conditional sale, whether anomalous.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—contd.

A mortgage by conditional sale is not an anomalous mortgage within the meaning of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. C BADAL MOLLA v. CHEMAI MONDAL 894

——— S. 99—Decree on security bond—Execution—Property charged, whether can be sold 430

——— S. 108 — Lease—Assignment of lease, effect of.

It was not the intention of the Legislature by enacting section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act to bring the sub-lessee and the mortgagee from the lessee into direct relations with the lessor. Mere possession, in the absence of privity of estate, will not make the mortgagee liable to the lessor.

One effect of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the lessee does not cease to be liable on the lease by reason only of an out and out assignment, but he will, as in England, cease to be liable if the lessor accepts rent from the assignee and thereby creates a privity of contract between himself and the assignee. The liabilities of the transferee arise in India, as in England, on and by reason of the transfer, and do not depend on the question whether the transferee has obtained possession. M NOCHULIYIL EAZHUVAN THEETHI'S SON v. ERALPOD RAJAH, 32 M. L. J. 442; 21 M. L. T. 401 841

——— S. 108 (b)—Lease—Duty of lessor to put lessee in possession—Notice to tenants, whether sufficient.

A lessor is bound to give the lessee possession of the property leased.

The obligation of the lessor is absolute and he must perform it, notwithstanding the fact that the lessee can take legal proceedings to recover possession himself from the party in occupation.

A notice to the tenants telling them to pay rent to the transferee amounts to delivery of possession only where the transferor himself has possession to give, and not where he is himself out of possession. P ABDUL KARIM v. UPPER INDIA BANK, 96 P. W. R. 1917; 110 P. L. R. 1917 684

——— S. 108 (j).

The principle of section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act applies to all kinds of leases, including agricultural leases even though the section itself does not apply to agricultural leases. M PENUMETSA RAPI-RAJU v. GOPSETTI NARAYANASWAMI NAIDU 590

——— S. 111 (b), (g)—Forfeiture of service tenure created before or after the passing of the Act.

A service tenure, whether created before or after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, determines if the tenant refuses to render the requisite service and the landlord is thereupon entitled to re-enter without serving a notice to quit upon the tenant.

Clause (g) of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act does not render it obligatory upon the lessor to serve a notice to quit upon a lessee who has forfeited his tenancy; a mere demand for possession is sufficient to determine the lease.

The plaintiffs instituted a suit for the ejectment of the defendants from land, which they held on condition that they would serve the plaintiffs as barbers and enjoy the land in consideration of their service, on the allegation that the defendants by refusing to perform the requisite service had forfeited the tenancy:

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—contd.

Held, that if the service tenure be assumed to have been created before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, it was competent to the plaintiffs, on the service thus ceasing, to resume and take possession of the land without reference to the Court at all, but if, on the other hand, the tenancy be assumed to have been created after the Transfer of Property Act came into operation then the position of the parties must be determined with reference to the terms of section 111, clause (b) or clause g), whichever was applicable to the case, and that in either case, the defendants were liable to be ejected without service of notice to quit. C RAMNATH SIL v. SIBA SUNDARI DEBYA, 25 C. L. J. 332 348

Ss. 122, 123—Death-bed gift—Registration—

Possession, delivery of, whether necessary.

Under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act delivery of possession is not essential to the validity of a gift, and a gift by registered deed would be valid without more. But where a gift involves questions of marriage, succession, inheritance or religious usage, the Buddhist Law will apply. L B MAUNG BA MAUNG v. MAUNG PYU 854

S. 137—Contract—Negotiability—Delivery order, whether negotiable—Document of title—Test—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 102, 108, 178.

Negotiability can be attached to documents by mercantile usage.

A document is negotiable if by the custom of the money market it is transferable as if it were cash; and its bona fide transferee obtains a good title to it (because of its currency) although his transferor might have stolen it.

The test whether a document is a "document of title" or a "document showing title" to goods is whether the document in question is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by endorsement or delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive the goods thereby represented.

A delivery order is a document of title to the goods to which it relates and the property of the transferor in the goods passes to the transferee by delivery of the document; but when once delivery has been made to the person entitled, the delivery order is exhausted and ceases to have any effect.

A delivery order may or may not be negotiable according to the conditions attached to it or according to the usage of trade under which it is issued. Case-law discussed.

A document may be negotiable although it contains conditions, but when a seller of goods issues a document the real effect of which is that he will hand over certain goods to any one producing the document provided he has them and he has been paid his price and all charges in connection with them, no usage or custom of trade can compel him to hand the goods over if he has not the goods or has not been paid the price and stipulated charges. A document showing title to goods represents the goods to which it relates and the law governing its transferability is the same as the law which governs

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT—concl.

the transferability of the goods themselves and is contained in sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act. L B KHOO EO KHWEI v. NANIGRAM JAGANATH FIRM 86

TRESPASSER in possession of demised land—Lessor, right of—Ejectment.

The mere fact that a trespasser has been in actual possession of land let out on lease for twenty years is no reason why he should not be ejected from the land by the lessor, unless it is proved that the trespasser had taken a bona fide settlement from a third person whom he believed, in fact, to be the landlord and entitled to let out the land. C HAJRA SARDARA v. KUNJA BEHARI NAG, 25 C. L. J. 635; 21 C. W. N. 1001 271

TRUST, creation of—Revocation—Author of trust, power of, to revoke.

The position of a person who creates a trust of his property and declares himself to be the first manager becomes merely that of a manager and he is not competent subsequently to revoke the trust or to alter it or to appoint new managers. A SIDDHAN LAL v. GAURI SHANKAR 165

—Head of mutt, position of 531

—Purchase of trust properties in Court sale—Purchaser, whether can assign for value.

One S. acquired large properties in the salt trade. In 1894 by an instrument of deed of trust he endowed certain charities with some properties and directed that a sum of Rs. 144 should be spent every year on account of the charity and directed the members of his family to act as trustees. In 1895 he died and A., one of his sons, succeeded as trustee. In execution of a decree obtained against A. for debts due from his father the charity properties were attached and brought to sale. The first defendant became the purchaser and was in possession ever since 1898. In 1913, A. was removed from his trusteeship and B. was appointed in his place. In a suit by B. to recover possession of the properties on behalf of the charities:

Held, (1) that the suit was barred by limitation;

(2) that the power to apply Rs. 144 every year towards the charity properties was not a proprietary interest in the property alienated which could pass to an alienee but was only a power which the trustee had to exercise from time to time. M SUBBAYYA PANDARAM v. MAHAMAD MUSTAPHA MARACAYAR, 21 M. L. T. 62; 5 L. W. 190; 32 M. L. J. 85 50

—Trustee for payment to creditors—Transfer of bonds and book debts to trustee—Accounts—Negligence in collection—Damage or loss, liability of trustee for—Mortgagee in possession—Interest, liability to pay—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 23.

A trustee, appointed by a person for payment to his creditors to whom the debtor transfers bonds and book debts for collection and payment as aforesaid is bound to realize the amounts due thereon with due diligence and is liable for loss caused to his appointor by his laches. The trustee should, in that event, be debited with the face value of the documents and should not be allowed the costs of suit incurred by him for his belated enforcement of the bonds.

In the matter of liability for interest, there is a difference between a trustee and a mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee in possession, as soon as his debt is paid off, will be bound to pay interest on any money which he may retain thereafter, while the liability of a trustee would depend on whether he is guilty of a breach of trust.

TRUST—concl'd.

Where there has been negligence in the trustee and contributory negligence in the debtor who appointed him which has occasioned loss to the latter, the trustee should not be charged with interest. M GOLLA NAGAYA v. THUNUGUNTALA VENKATA SUBBARAYUDU 779

TRUSTS ACT (II OF 1882), S. 23 779
S. 90 581

U. P. LAND REVENUE ACT (III OF 1901), S. 36
—Ex-proprietary rights, claim as to—Limitation.

A vendor's application under section 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, filed within one year from the date of the application for mutation made by the vendee, but beyond one year from the date of the sale, is barred by limitation. U P B R SHESHMAN PRASAD v. BINDESHURI MISIR, 4 O. L. J. 170 66 —Ss. 79, 234—Determination of account payable to proprietor—Revenue Board, powers of, to make rules—Rule 1, Cir. No. 63 of 1863. 200

—S. 79—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 33
—Enhancement of rent—Tenant with heritable non-transferable rights—Settlement Court, order by—Judicial decision—Occupancy tenant 63

—Ss. 234, 79—Determination of amount payable to proprietor—Revenue Board, powers of, to make rules—Rule 1, Cir. No. 63 of 1863.

The Revenue Board has power under section 234 to frame rules, laying down the manner in which the rent is to be determined, but it has no power to exclude any class of under-proprietors, whether paying rent or not, from the operations of section 79, for section 234 does not permit the Board to frame rules inconsistent with the U. P. Land Revenue Act, and section 79 does not recognize rules other than those relating to the determination of rent. The suggestion made in rule 18 that where no rent is reserved, a superior proprietor can apply to resume the rent-free under-proprietary holding, is not, therefore, justified by the provisions of section 234 or 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act; and in so far as it excludes rent-free under-proprietors from the operation of section 79, is devoid of any legal authority.

The conditions contained in rule 1 of Circular No. 63 of 1863 that groves planted by proprietors should, after the village has passed out of their hands, be deemed to be their under-proprietary holdings, if they have remained in possession of them, should be proved in each case, and cannot be inferred from uncertain data. O SHANKAR SAHAI v. GAGADHAR PRASAD, 20 O. C. 171; 4 O. L. J. 499 200

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT (I OF 1900), S. 17—U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), retrospective effect of—Offence under old Act—Sanction under new Act, validity of.

A Municipal Board has power to grant sanction under the provisions of the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, for the prosecution of a person in respect of an offence committed under the Act of 1900 inasmuch as by section 17 of that Act a Municipal Board is a corporate body with a perpetual succession and a common seal and has power to do all things necessary for its constitution and can sue and be sued in its corporate name; and these powers have not been altered or limited by the Act of 1916. A BACHA LAL v. EMPEROR, 15 A. L. J. 530; 18 Cr. L. J. 700 700

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT (1900)—concl'd.

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT (II OF 1916), retrospective effect of—Offence under old Act—Sanction under new Act, validity of 700
—S. 2 (2),—"Building", meaning of.

A tin-roofed shed erected in front of a shop is a "shed" and also a "roofed structure" within the meaning of the definition of the word "building" in section 2, clause (2), of the Municipalities Act. A EMPEROR v. HASHIM ALI, 39 A. 482; 15 A. L. J. 461; 18 Cr. L. J. 659 307

—Ss. 185, 186, 2 (2)—"Building", meaning of —Notice under s. 86, whether necessary before conviction under s. 185—Erection of building after lapse of sanction—Prosecution.

The issuing of a notice by the Board under the provisions of section 186 of the U. P. Municipalities Act is not a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution under section 185.

In a case in which a person allows a sanction by the Municipal Board to erect a building to lapse and then proceeds to set up the building without giving fresh notice or submitting any fresh application to the Municipal Board, a prosecution for an offence against the Act is a more appropriate remedy than an order for the demolition of the building. A EMPEROR v. HASHIM ALI, 39 A. 482; 15 A. L. J. 461; 18 Cr. L. J. 659 307 —Ss. 202, 210—"Structure", meaning of—Fixing portable plank over public drain, whether structure—Offence.

The word "structure", as used in section 209 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, means a structure of a permanent character. Therefore, the fixing of a portable plank over a public drain cannot be deemed to be the erection of a structure within the meaning of that section, and does not amount to an offence under section 210 of the Act. A EMPEROR v. MUHAMMAD YUSUF, 18 Cr. L. J. 659; 15 A. L. J. 290; 39 A. 386 312

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—Contract for sale of land by Hindu co-parcener Suit for specific performance, partition and possession against all co-parceners, maintainability of—Misjoinder of parties—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 19, 27—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, rr. 3, 5, O. II, rr. 3, 4, O. VI, rr. 16, 17, O. VII, r. 1—Amendment of plaint—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 54, 55—Alienee of specified properties of joint family, position of.

By Full Bench (per Wallis, C. J., and Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., Abdur Rahim, J., dissenting).—The relief of partition and possession cannot be claimed by the vendee in one suit as well as execution of a sale-deed as against persons not parties to the contract of sale.

Per Wallis, C. J.—All that the illustration to clause (c) of section 27 of the Specific Relief Act shows is that if one of several joint tenants contracts, as he is entitled to do, to sell his share and dies before performing his contract, specific performance of that contract may be enforced against the other joint-tenants. The section and the illustration have no bearing on the question whether persons who are strangers to the contract and against whom it cannot be specifically enforced can be properly joined as defendants and partition claimed against them as co-parceners of the vendor.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—contd.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract by a member of an undivided Hindu family to sell his share, it is not permissible to join the other members of the family as defendants merely with a view to obtaining partition and possession of the alleged vendor's share against them.

The joinder of strangers, not parties to the contract, in such a suit would amount to misjoinder.

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—The right of the buyer in enforcing a contract for the sale of immoveable property is a right in personam against the vendor and arises out of the contract for sale, and is different from the title or the right of property which the purchaser obtains on the execution of the conveyance which enables him to sue in ejectment all persons in possession, including his own vendor. The fact that a buyer, when suing for specific performance of a contract of sale, does not seek recovery of possession would not prevent him from seeking that relief on his title which gives him another cause of action. It is doubtful whether the obligation under the contract of sale to give possession is one which is capable of being specifically enforced, and whether the proper relief is not damages for breach of the contract to give possession till execution of the conveyance, after which date the purchaser would be entitled to mesne profits from the person in possession, whether such person is the vendor or a stranger without title.

Quære.—Whether a suit for possession based on the obligation under a contract of sale can be brought against a subsequent purchaser with notice of the contract who has obtained possession as such purchaser.

If there is an existing cause of action for partition on the date of the institution of a suit for specific performance, the question whether the two causes of action, one for specific performance and the other for partition and possession, can be joined in one suit, would depend not only on the provisions of Order I, rules 3 and 5, Civil Procedure Code, which primarily regulate the joinder of parties, but also of Order II, rules 3 and 4, which provide for joinder of causes of action.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—A purchaser from a co-parcener can enforce specific performance of his contract against the other co-parceners and in a suit for the said relief, the joinder of a prayer for possession or partition is permissible under section 27 of the Specific Relief Act and Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code.

Under rule 3 of Order I it is sufficient if the right to relief exists in respect of or arises out of the same transaction or series of transactions, subject only to the condition that there be any common question of law or fact to be decided. It does not matter whether there are more than one and technically different causes of action, or the liabilities of the several defendants are different, nor is it necessary that every defendant should be interested in all the reliefs claimed in the suit.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—contd.

The right to possession arises out of the contract of sale so as to be covered by the words of Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. The fact that by virtue of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, no interest in immoveable property is acquired by the contract does not affect the question. It is sufficient for the plaintiff to say that by the contract he obtained the right to acquire the property with the aid of the Court, the execution of a registered conveyance and delivery of possession being the means by which the right is to be enforced.

Nor does it make any difference that the right to possession is contingent on the plaintiff establishing his right to the execution of a proper conveyance by the defendant.

By the Division Bench (per Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.)—Though an alienee of specific portions of joint family property does not, as of right, acquire any interest in it, his conveyance enables him to demand a partition of the family property and entitles him either to the specified property, if that can equitably be assigned to his vendor's share, or to its equivalent from such other property as that share may include.

The suit should not, in any event, be dismissed for joinder of prayers for possession and partition along with the relief for execution of a conveyance. The plaint should be allowed to be amended by deleting the prayers for possession and partition, and if not so amended, the Court should dismiss the suit so far as regards the objectionable prayers and dispose of it in so far as it relates to specific performance. M RANGAYYA REDDY v. SUBRAMANYA AIYAR, 32 M. L. J. 574; 40 M. 365; 5 L. W. 797; 21 M. L. T. 385 429 —Money left with vendee for payment to mortgagee—Redemption, no attempt made by vendee for—Mortgagee's suit decreed—Decree satisfied by vendee—Vendee, position of.

On the sale of an immoveable property a portion of the sale-consideration was left with the vendee for payment to the mortgagee of the said property. The sale-deed provided that if the money so left with the vendee fell short of the sum actually due to the mortgagee the vendor was bound to discharge the excess money, and that if the vendee was put to any expense in connection with the deposit of the mortgage-money by reason of any bad faith or dishonesty on the part of the mortgagee he was to bear the burden of that cost himself. The vendee made no attempt to redeem the mortgage. Long after the date of the sale and the date when redemption of the mortgage first became possible the mortgagee sued both the vendor and the vendee on the basis of the mortgage and obtained a decree against them. The vendee discharged the whole decretal amount and then brought a suit against the vendor for recovery of the difference between the sum he had had to pay for the satisfaction of the decree and the sum which had been left with him at the time of the sale for payment to the mortgagee:

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—contd.

Held, (1) that the vendee was bound in the first instance to redeem, or at least to make an attempt to redeem the mortgage;

(2) that the vendee having failed to make an attempt to redeem the mortgage at a reasonably early date after the conclusion of the sale transaction, so as to discover that the money left with him fell short of the requisite amount, he was not entitled to the sum claimed by him, but only to the difference between the sum left with him and the amount which was actually payable to the mortgagee on the date when redemption of the mortgage first became possible.

○ MAZHAR ALI KHAN v. ALI ASGHAR, 4 O. L. J. 321 361

—Mortgage by vendee, declaration of validity of, in action by vendor against vendee and his mortgagee—Transfer pending suit 826

—Performance of contract rendered impossible by outbreak of war—Rights and liabilities of parties 383

—Sale—Consideration, non-payment of, whether renders sale void—Intention.

Mere want of payment of consideration does not render a sale void, unless it is shown that it was the intention of the parties that title should not pass until consideration is paid. But the intention of the parties can be judged not merely from what they say or do at the time of the sale, but also from their subsequent conduct.

Where a purchaser paid down a small fraction of the price in the first place, and this went in sale expenses, not into the vendor's pocket, and the balance of the price was promised to be paid on mutation, but for 9½ years he made no attempt to enforce the sale or to obtain mutation of names:

Held, that the presumption was that the purchaser had given up all his rights in respect of the sale. P TARA CHAND v. NIRMAL DAS, 46 P. W. R. 1917 489 —Sale—Suit in name of vendor after sale of his interest, maintainability of.

After the sale of a landlord's interest in land with all claims for rent in arrears, a suit for rent is maintainable in the name of the landlord as plaintiff, where the document under which the property is sold authorises the purchaser, as the irrevocable attorney of the vendor, to continue and prosecute in the name of the vendor suits with reference to the moneys and claims transferred by the document. C MOHENDRA NATH MADAK v. PARESH CHANDRA GHOSH 506

WAJIB-UL-ARZ, construction of 542

—, entry in, construction of

Wherean entry in a wajib-ul-arz is in clear words the Court is not justified in giving it a strained meaning. A BRIJ NARAIN RAI v. RAM DHARI RAI 40 WAQP. See HINDU LAW; MUHAMMADAN LAW.

WILL—Bequest to charity, construction of—Uncertainty—Cy-pres, doctrine of—Trusts Act (II of 1882), applicability of.

WILL—contd.

Where a disposition in a Will indicates an intention to benefit charities, or a class of charities generally, treating the particular named objects of gift as mere instruments for carrying out such general intention, the general purpose of charity will be executed according to the doctrine of cy-pres.

If a devise in a Will can be construed as a bequest to "charity", in the sense in which that word is understood in English Law, then the disposition is valid, and is governed by the Indian Trusts Act. If, however, it is a devise in the alternative for purposes which are not charitable, though benevolent or philanthropic, then the bequest is void.

In India the Courts will only recognise the validity of trusts which they can either themselves execute or can control when in process of being executed by trustees.

Case-law discussed and reviewed.

A testatrix devised her estate to a trustee that "he of his own judgment (may) give as a donation or apply or invest the balance to or for any person or persons for his, her or their use or benefit, or to or for any charitable or religious institution or object, as he may think proper."

Held, that the bequest was void for uncertainty. N MRS. ELKINS v. REV. DR. CULLEN, 13 N. L. R. 51 791 —Execution—Undue influence—Advice or persuasion, whether unlawful—Illness of testator, effect of—Burden of proof.

The onus is upon the propounder of a Will to prove that the testator not only did make the Will but that he possessed sound testamentary disposition at the time of making the Will and that he made the Will of his own accord and not on account of any importunity or coercion.

Advice or even persuasion cannot be said to be unlawful unless it deprives the testator of the freedom of the Will and amounts to coercion.

Illness is not in itself sufficient to invalidate a Will, unless it impairs the mind in such a manner as to deprive the executant of the power of understanding the consequences of making the Will. PAT NARAIN DEO v. KUSUM KUMARI 597

WORDS AND PHRASES—"Ijmal", meaning of.

The word "ijmal" is accepted in Bihar as the vernacular equivalent of the residuary share contemplated by the Revenue Sales Act. The word is never used as meaning the residue of a separate account.

Per Mullick, J.—The word "ijmal" means nothing more than "joint". It is an adjective and not the name of any particular thing or part of the estate. It is a relative term and has not even the fixity attached to the word residuary. PAT KRISHNA DAYAL GIR v. ABDUL GAFFUR, 2 P. L. J. 402; 2 P. L. W. 229 13

—"Malguzari," meaning of.

The word 'malguzari,' although usually meaning an amount paid to the Crown, is susceptible of meaning the amount due from under-proprietors to the superior proprietor. O CHANDRA CHANDRA BISWAS v. LALLAN SINGH, 4 O. L. J. 145 42

THE JAMMU & KASHMIR UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

DATE LOAND

Class No. _____ Book No _____

Vol. _____ Copy _____

Accession No. _____

--	--	--	--

Dr.
V. S. Choudhary Jammu nagari.

THE JAMMU & KASHMIR UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

DATE LOAND

Class No. _____ Book No _____

Vol. _____ Copy _____

Accession No. _____

--	--	--

THE JAMMU & KASHMIR UNIVERSITY
LIBRARY.

DATE LOANED

Class No. [REDACTED] Book No. [REDACTED]

Vol. _____ Copy _____

Accession No. [REDACTED]

Dr
Sign Court
Kashmir Jagar.